A Vision that has become a Reality

Every Age of Progress Has Its Picture in the Clouds

There's a lesson in the marvelous development of the Great Southwest for every individual privileged to live in this wonderful Land of Opportunity. To dwell here and not be inspired to action in some line of constructive human endeavor is proof positive that the sand is running low in the hour glass of one's life.

The deserts still would be desolate wastes if man had accepted as truth the pessimistic views of statesmen in a generation when vision ended for them at the rugged and snowcapped skyline of the Rocky Mountains.

No longer do men that know characterize the fertile soil in this land of inspiration as "thirty cents an acre"—they know too well the wonders which can be wrought with irrigation's magic wand.

Another Dream Has Come True

The Pima long staple cotton industry in the Salt River Valley in Arizona has emerged from the visionary and experimental stages into the realm of actuality. Farmers are making handsome profits growing Pima cotton. That is why the Liberty Long Staple Cotton Company is clearing 1000 acres of land in the Salt River Valley Cotton Belt to develop one of the best cotton plantations in the Southwest.

Here is an opportunity to invest your money in the cotton industry on a safe basis with 1000 acres of land, its improvements and its crop yield as security.

WHY DON'T YOU?

Four per cent. dividend was paid January 14, 1920, to the stockholders of the Burk-Kirby Oil Company. Larger dividends will be paid February 15, 1920.

Dividends in the Burk-Kirby Oil Company are declared out of the actual earnings of the company, in accordance with the strict rulings of the Commissioner of Corporations of California. It is contrary to law to pay dividends out of anything but accrued earnings, and it is the policy of the Burk-Kirby Oil Company to so invest incoming capital that these earnings increase regularly.

Actual production is yielding these profits. Besides the present production, the company has sixteen most valuable holdings checkerboarded in the heart of the Texas oil fields.

With dividends such as these, and stock selling at par value, $1.00 per share, don't you think you owe it to yourself to investigate? Call, phone or write.

Would You Like to Join With a Group of Sincere Business Men In a Real Honest-to-goodness Oil Proposition?

—a proposition in which high finance knows no part.
—a proposition not promoted by "promoters."
—a proposition which offers conservative promise of making its stockholders rich.

Such an opportunity is presented to you by the Southern California Oil Co.—a $500,000.00 California corporation (500,000 shares at $1.00 per share par value.)

This Corporation Owns a 40 Acre Lease Directly Between Gushers

in the Montebello-Whittier Field, 14 miles from Los Angeles via Seventh street and Stephenson avenue.

Only within the past week the United Oil Co. brought in a big well (variously estimated at 700 to 1000 barrels per day) only 1750 feet from our property.

Only a few months ago the big Whitley gusher—2500 feet from our property came in at an estimated production of more than 1000 barrels per day. Four other wells are now nearing completion in this same gusher territory.

On the other side of us the five famous McGinley wells are said to be producing 85,000 barrels per month. The Standard Oil Co., Union Oil Co., General Petroleum, Doheny, Mascot, Shell and other big operators are active all around us. It is generally conceded that ours is one of the most promising properties in the Montebello District, which, according to latest figures is now producing at the rate of 1,131,000 barrels of oil per month.

State Corporation Permit Number 8453 authorizes us to sell 250,000 shares at $1.00 per share.

We propose to start drilling as soon as the first $50,000.00 has been subscribed. The remarkable wells which have been coming in so close to us, and the very favorable geologist's report made on our property, encourage us in the anticipation of a real strike. If you would like to join with us, the opportunity is open now.

Best grades of navel oranges that escaped cold damage in transit continue to command high average prices in the eastern markets. Weather conditions throughout the East have been unfavorable for a good movement of oranges and the auction centers have shown many low sales on the "frozen-in-transit" fruit that is finding its way to the auctions. Best stock "frost free" is averaging from $5 to $6.25 in the auctions. Private-sale markets all report an increasing inquiry for navels. The trade is waking up to the fact that the navel crop in California is a short one. Latest estimates show not to exceed 10,000 cars navels remaining for shipment after this week.

Sizes are now running heavy 126s and 176s. The auctions are demanding the large sizes as usual while the private-sale markets show a preference for the smaller sizes.

F.o.b. California quotations are on a basis of $4 to $4.25, usual terms, the latter being for cars running desirable sizes.

Cash quotations range from $3.75 to $3.85, according to district.

Buyers are offering from 4 to 4¼ cents per pound for navels and considerable business is reported on that basis, although growers in some districts are holding for 5 cents per pound.

Danger from frost damage in California has now passed with a short crop an assured fact, there is every reason to look for a steady advance in the market.

Lemon prices are soaring. The trade are cleaned up on their high-priced stock and are coming back strong for supplies.

The influenza epidemic is spreading in many sections of the country and is swelling the demand for lemons.

California lemons are given the preference over the foreign stock and as a result shipments are now going forward at an average of 25 cars daily as against three to four cars daily two weeks ago. Pickings are heavy and an ample supply of good stock lemons are available.

F.o.b. California quotations are on a basis of $5 to $5.50 for best stock.

FINANCIAL REVIEW OF THE WEEK.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Extreme weakness of foreign exchange and another advance of interest and discount rates to highest points ever ordered by the Federal reserve bank were of themselves enough to effect an irregular reaction of quoted values in this week's dull stock market.

The break in exchange which caused leading remittances to fall below all previous levels of depreciation was again mainly precipitated by trade balances unfavorable to the European countries. The movement doubtless received further impetus from enforced liquidation here and abroad.

Efforts of the central bank to release "frozen" credits evidently apply to foreign bills no less than to better known and more negotiable forms of financial accommodation which have been subjected to speclative influences.

Shorts had the better of the week's operations, in so far as losses exceeded gains of but hurried covering was occasionally noted in some of the high-grade industrials and specialties controlled by professional interests.

In the important lines of industry production continued at high pressure. Statements of the United States and Bethlehem Steel companies covering the final quarter of 1919 are to be issued next week. They are expected to throw an interesting light upon labor conditions during that period.

OVERSUPPLY WEAKENS CAULIFLOWER MARKET

LETTUCE DEMAND DULL; CELERY, RHUBARB, SWEET POTATOES HIGHER.

All fruits and vegetables met with a very ready demand during yesterday's session on the local produce market. Buyers were out in force and under the pressure of active trading, prices showed an upward tendency for many commodities. Arrivals were moderate in quantity, and for the most part in very good condition. An oversupply of cauliflower, however, again depressed the market, and a large part of yesterday's offerings were very poor as to quality and condition, another factor which caused prices to weaken. The decline amounted to 50 cents per crate for both the fancy shipping stock and the field-run offerings, while by the dozen heads a fall of 15 cents was in evidence. Lettuce remained practically unchanged for the majority of the offerings, but the price range was wider for the poorer grades, quotations yesterday being from 75 cents to 90 cents per crate, as compared with 90 and 95 cents per crate of the preceding day. Celery moved up sharply on account of the small available supply. Blight has gotten into the local crops, with the result that supplies have been greatly reduced. Celery showed an advance of about 25 cents per dozen bunches yesterday, while fancy shipping stock brought prices 25 cents per crate higher than those of Friday's market. Rhubarb went up 10 cents per pound, with lug boxes selling at an increase of 15 cents each. While sweet potatoes did not advance sharply in price, the tone of the market was firmer, some of the best offerings yesterday selling as high as $5.50 per hundred, an increase of 50 cents per hundredweight. Potatoes held firm and unchanged at the preceding day's prices.

The shipping market was dull, yesterday, with prices lower for many of the offerings. Cauliflower in straight cars slumped 10 cents per crate, while in mixed cars the fall amounted to 25 cents per crate. Sales were comparatively few, even at the lower level. Cabbage, which was bringing around $90 per ton during Friday's session, was down to $85 per ton yesterday. Very few sales were made as high as $90. Both Imperial Valley and local lettuce were weaker, due to oversupply, falling off 25 cents per crate. Celery was steady at Friday's prices.

HELD ON TWO CHARGES.

Accused of having received stolen property from Alice Waggoner, formerly a cashier for the Fifth Street Store, William C. Butcher, who made a trip with the girl and Edith Schlosser to El Paso, Tex., where all three were arrested, was held to answer yesterday by Justice Palmer. He was also held for embezzlement. The Waggoner girl was accused of defrauding the store of $1350 and the Schlosser girl was charged with aiding her.

California Permit 6319

We Said: "You Share in All We Acquire."

And—we have just acquired an additional lease—1000 acres in Callahan County.

Right in the heart of production, in the proven fields of Callahan County, we have secured an additional holding of 1,000 acres. Our new property is in the western part of the same county which brought in the famous Clyde gasser, a 40,000,000 foot gasser at less than 600 feet depth. Producing wells are in close proximity. Stockholders of the Texas Treasure Oil Company share in this recent acquisition, as they will share in any others that we may secure. Our officials are always on the alert for new holdings in proven fields.

This new holding is backed by our properties in Coleman county—100 acres close to big producers; 320 acres in Presidio County, a field which holds great promise; and an additional 80 acres in Callahan County.

Four holdings, all located in the richest oil belt in the world.

Our guarantee to stockholders is that all profits of the company will be used as dividends until the entire amount paid for stock has been returned; from that time on, 75% of the profits will be used for continued dividends, and 25% for development of the properties in which stockholders share.

Stock now sells at par value, $1.00 per share, non-assessable. Quick action is essential. We strongly urge you to make reservations now for as many shares as you can afford. But, act now, before you lay this paper aside. For convenience, use the coupon below.

"Oil Gushers 'Mid Orange Groves"

Richfield-Union Gets Into Richfield Oil Field Limelight TODAY

Christening of derrick on "No 1 lease" this afternoon at 3:00 P.M. Expected to make history for famous "Richfield-Placentia Ridge."

Richfield-Union

bears the same relation to the "Top of the Ridge" as "Chapman Gusher," Standard Oil Gushers No. 1 and No. 2, General Petroleum Gusher, and Petroleum Midway Gusher.

Do not confuse Richfield-Union's Placentia property with other Richfield-Placentia oil lands that are "off the ridge."

Every "Gusher" in "Richfield District" is located on this mysterious "Ridge"

The overwhelming proportion of new wells now being drilled by "old line" companies also are "on this ridge."

When new reports of "more new wells" in "Richfield district" are made by any "old line" companies—by Standard Oil, Union Oil, General Petroleum, Petroleum Midway, Amalgamated, Clark Oil, etc.—you will then see that nine out of ten are "on the ridge," because that is where they all are doing their "present drilling."

A number of these "new wells" will bring "production" nearer to Richfield-Union than any of the present five "gushers"

Every "new well," therefore, hereafter "brought in" west of the Standard Oil "gushers" should force Richfield-Union more clearly into the limelight.

Our block of "Dollar stock," however, is steadily growing smaller, day by day

We have no idea that any of our "dollar stock will be available even by the time that our No. 1 well" derrick, christened today, is well started toward the oil sands depth, because we expect the "old line" companies to prove everything we have said above, as fast as their "new wells" come in.

Then, too, there is that possibility that we may withdraw all unsold "dollar stock" or materially advance its price any time that "new wells" further convince us of its greater worth.

We have four other leases to be affected by daily developments in "Richfield district." Two leases are inside "Richfield townsite," between "Richfield-Yorba" and the "gushers."

Come out to our "derrick christening" this afternoon—Enthuse for yourself. Look for the big banner at Placentia.

Our tally-ho will leave our Los Angeles office at 12:45 p.m. this afternoon. Telephone for a seat.

PROVISIONS STEADY; CORN PRICE STRONGER.

PERSISTENT BUYING BY COMMISSION HOUSES READILY ABSORBS OFFERINGS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—Persistent buying on the part of commission houses readily absorbed offerings today in the corn pit, and made prices stronger. The opening, which varied from the same as yesterday's finish to ⅜ cent higher, with May $1.35 ½to $1.36 and July $1.33¼ to $1.33⅝, was followed by moderate gains all around.

Oats tended upwards with corn. After opening ⅛ to ⅜ cent higher, including May at 83¼ to 83⅜, the market continued to ascend.

Provisions were firmer as a result of upturns in the value of hogs and grain. Selling lacked volume.

Week-end profit-taking eased the market somewhat in the later dealings. Prices closed steady at the same as yesterday's finish to ⅜ cent higher, with May $1.35⅝ to $1.36 and July $1.33 to $1.33⅛.

Corn, No. 2 mixed and No. 3 mixed, not quoted; No. 4 mixed, 1.47@1.48; No. 2 yellow, not quoted; No. 3, 1.55. Rye, No. 2, 1.62@1.69. Barley, 1.45@1.48. Timothy seed, 10.50@14.50. Clover seed, 45.00@59.00.

Close: Corn, January, 1.45; May, 1.35⅝; July, 1.33. Oats, May, 83¾; July, 75⅝. Pork, 39.25; May, 39.30. Lard, May, 24.50; July, 24.80. Ribs, May, 20.80; July, 21.10.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Wheat, spot, quiet; No. 2 red, 2.65, nominal, f.o.b steamer New York. Corn, spot, firm; No. 2 yellow, 1.72½; No. 2 white, 1.71½, cost and freight New York, ten-day shipment. Oats, spot, firm; No. 3 white, 1.01.

MILO IS UNSTEADY; MAY BARLEY SLUMPS.

Little interest was taken by grain traders in the proceedings on the floor of the local exchange yesterday. Milo was weaker, as were also barley futures, but the slump in prices was considered by the majority of traders to be only a temporary affair; milo, it is claimed, continues to be in very strong hands, and the outlook for barley futures is good, in view of the small supply. Yesterday's receipts amounted to 8 carloads of milo and 1 of barley. Immediate shipment milo was from 25 to 50 cents per ton lower, with 2 cars for ten days delivery selling for $3.07½. In the futures, January and February milo showed a decline of 25 cents. Other months were unchanged, with no sales recorded. Barley for immediate shipment was unchanged, as were also the futures for the months of January and February. May barley, however, fell 75 cents, with June and August deliveries showing signs of weakness. A sale of 100 tons of all May barley was made at $3.42½, while a car of northern water wheat, mixed feed, brought $53.50.

The Last Chance Before the Well Comes-In

Now Drilling at a Depth of over 2500 Feet

FINAL PUBLIC OFFERING AT PAR

Under California Corporation Permit

Gold Seal Petroleum Company (OF CALIFORNIA)

25c cents per share, par value. Only $20,000 worth for sale

Compare this offering with any other. It is in a class by itself. WHY? BECAUSE—

The Company owns a 40-year lease on 240 ACRES in the Little Brea Canyon, calling for only one-eighth royalty.

Its capitalization of only $450,000 equals only $1875 per acre. Compare this with any other company.

ITS WELL No. 1 is now DOWN to 2500 FEET

The drill is in brown shale with oil coloring and gas. Similar to the conditions encountered by Commonwealth Petroleum Co.'s Well No. 32, which came in flowing 1500 BARRELS at 3200 feet a few weeks ago. This well is immediately south of us at Olinda. DRILLING IS GOING ON ALL AROUND US.

The officers of the company actually expect a GUSHER.

Out-of-town clients better wire for reservations.

OIL LEASES

On well-located land, which is being drilled NOW, is the best speculative investment on the market today. It is an opportunity for the laboring man and the man of small capital to become independent.

We own our own drills and are drilling within half a mile of the lease we offer you. We protect your lease by our work. We guarantee clear title, quick action on your money, and a square deal. We are Los Angeles men, permanently located. We have done business here for eight years and expect to continue in business here. In the past we sold leases in the North Burkburnett field for $50.00 per acre which have since been sold for $10,000.00 per acre. We have sold leases to parties here who can sell out now at three for one. We will furnish you names of these parties if you will call at our offices.

There are gas and oil seepages on our land. We have geological reports, made by some of the best experts in the United States, recommending its being drilled for oil. We are putting our own money into drilling and proving our faith in the land by our works. We ask you to join us in the enterprise by taking leases on land contiguous to our drilling. We know the oil business from long experience, and WE ARE OPERATORS, DRILLERS and NOT MIDDLE MEN, as we handle our own property.

Come in and let us present our proposition, or write to us for literature. Remember, our slogan is QUICK ACTION AND A SQUARE DEAL. We will sell you a lease one-third down, balance 30-60 days, showing our confidence in the proposition, $10 per acre within two miles of our well now being drilled.

Three Aces

If you had three aces before the draw, you would stay in, wouldn't you? You would take a chance on filling in all probability. Well, we have Three Aces in this Company and we are about to draw.

Our first ace is the men in the company. All business depends on the men backing it and operating it. The men in our company are all successful business men who have made good in their own lines. They formed the company to make money by drilling for oil. They pay no salaries, no promotion fees and allow no expenses except for actual drilling. This protects your money.

Ace number two is our location. Competent and reliable geological experts are agreed that, in all probability, oil in unusually large quantities will be discovered in the Tularosa Basin. We went over thousands of acres and selected, on the advice of the best geologists obtainable, our drilling sites. We know where we are—we knew before we set up our rig. This insures the discovery of oil if the geologists are right—and the geologists are a unit in our favor.

Ace number three is the fact that we are DRILLING NOW. We have made no false promises. We are after the goods. We are down over 800 feet now and drilling day and night. This insures the discovery of oil if any oil lies within 4000 feet below the surface. We have contracted for a 4000-foot well and are staying with it.

NOW—We are about to draw. Do you want a look in? It costs money to drill a well. We are selling stock to meet operating expenses. This stock costs you One Dollar a share. If we get the oil, and it looks very much now as though we would, for we have done everything humanly and scientifically possible to get in—we draw and we fill. Do you know that the day oil is discovered in Tularosa, our 5000 acres will increase in value enormously? Do you know that oil will make money in an instant for every one who owns a share of our stock? The proposition is clean cut. We have laid our cards on th table.

EXTRA—DOWN COMES MY PRICE.

For my large Wilshire colonial, 7 beautiful rooms, intended to sell for $12,500 but slashed for quick deal to $10,250.

The option I gave a certain speculator has expired. His price was $12,500, but now I am free to sell whom I please. I want quick action—a modest profit based on costs four months ago—and cash to build more. Lumber and everything else is up, but with me each job stands on its own costs. I am a builder—not a profiteer.

Most beautiful corner in Wilshire, big lot, both streets asphalt, splendid restricted neighborhood. Very complete and elaborate tile work—everything inside and out FIRST CLASS. See it at once, it was never before offered or advertised at $10,250, but I will sell at that figure to first cash buyer. Phone 66740, ask for my representatives, MR. BURKE or MR. BATTELLE, at

FOR SALE—

"CARLSBAD BY THE SEA."

ACTUAL SALES SINCE JANUARY FIRST

Carlsbad's winter climate is like summer elsewhere, which makes possible our wonderful production of vegetables and fruits, and at a time when other districts are too cold. This is why one man made from one crop of peas this season. Records of $800 an acre returns are plentiful.

CARLSBAD PEAS NEVER FREEZE.

Planting of Kentucky Wonder beans for the early market will begin very soon. These bring returns equal to the peas. Carlsbad produces almonds, lemons, figs, peas, string beans, cucumbers, summer squash, green peppers, etc., all big money-makers.

Government records for 5 years show a minimum temperature of 34 deg. and a maximum of 90 deg. Where can you find such climatic conditions except at Carlsbad? Situated 85 miles south of Los Angeles, 35 miles north of San Diego—on Santa Fe Ry. and State Highway. Has schools, churches, stores, hotels, electricity, phones, Union High School 3 miles from Carlsbad, pure water under pressure, beautiful trees line streets and roads and the ocean borders the property. Such ideal conditions seem unattainable outside of Paradise, but they go to make up CARLSBAD.

This land is being sold in tracts of 5 acres and up at $600 an acre. Terms are one-fourth cash—the balance easy.

One share of stock in the Oceanside Mutual Water Company goes with each acre of land, the water company delivering pure water under pressure for irrigating and domestic purposes at cost.

Prices will soon be advanced. Make your investigation now.
Nowhere can you equal CARLSBAD.

PROVEN COTTON LAND.
800 ACRES.
Will sell all or part.
CHEAP WATER.

This is a tract of dark-colored sedimentary loam, all level, 3 miles to town, railroad station and paved highway, 4 miles to cotton gin. Water stands at 13 ft. Ordinary wells 125 ft. deep produce 100 miners' inches water. One pumping plant on adjoining ranch produces 245 miners' inches. All this tract has the very best water conditions.

Cotton raisers should investigate at once in order to have ample time to prepare for next planting.

Land near-by produced a bale to the acre of cotton this past season and the ranchers of the immediate district will plant over 700 acres of cotton in 1920.

Any man or syndicate financially able to develop water and grade this land can buy it without cash payment down and have reasonable time to pay out on. Will sell all or part. The land will soon pay for itself and for the improvements.

It is also good alfalfa, corn, grain, vine and fruit-tree soil.

Many near-by ranches are priced from $200 to $300 an acre.

Price $80 an acre.

FOR SALE—

ACTUAL SALES SINCE JANUARY FIRST

Carlsbad's winter climate is like summer elsewhere, which makes possible our wonderful production of vegetables and fruits, and at a time when other districts are too cold. This is why one man made from one crop of peas this season. Records of $500 an acre returns are plentiful.

CARLSBAD PEAS NEVER FREEZE.

Planting of Kentucky Wonder beans for the early market will begin very soon. These bring returns equal to the peas. Carlsbad produces almonds, lemons, figs, peas, string beans, cucumbers, summer squash, green peppers, etc., all big money-makers.

Government records for 5 years show a minimum temperature of 34 deg. and a maximum of 96 deg. Where can you find such climatic conditions except at Carlsbad? Situated 85 miles south of Los Angeles, 38 miles north of San Diego—on Santa Fe Ry. and State Highway. Has schools, churches, stores, hotels, electricity, phones, Union High School 3 miles from Carlsbad, pure water under pressure, beautiful tree line streets and roads and the ocean borders the property. Such ideal conditions seem unattainable outside of Paradise, but they go to make up CARLSBAD.

This land is being sold in tracts of 5 acres and up at $600 an acre. Terms are one-fourth cash—the balance easy.

One share of stock in the Oceanside Mutual Water Company goes with each acre of land, the water company delivering pure water under pressure for irrigating and domestic purposes at cost.

Prices will soon be advanced. Make your investigation now.
Nowhere can you equal CARLSBAD.

ANNOUNCEMENT!

MR. AND MRS. COMMON PEOPLE

OF MODERATE MEANS.

Of the 17,000 acres of Northeastern New Mexico (San Miguel county) oil lands, a continuation of the same structure through Oklahoma and Texas, held under lease by L. F. Williams of Cherryvale, just northwest of Tucumcari, N. M., a limited amount is being placed on the market at this time—cut up into as small as five-acre tracts. Mr. Williams' holding, both in the Cherryvale district and around Tucumcari, are now entirely surrounded by leases owned by such companies as the Standard, Union, Prairie Gas and Oil and other large companies. Extensive drilling operations are in progress; oil and gas have already been found in this district, a 2500-barrel refinery is now nearing completion at Tucumcari to take care of crude oil production from this district. Our geologist one of the most eminent in America, reports, briefly, "I have come to the conclusion that an enormous oil and gas pool exists in this region. If production is found in the Cherryvale Field, it will open THE LARGEST FIELD IN THIS CONTINENT."

We feel we are offering a great opportunity to the man or woman of moderate means to gain a firm foothold on the road to fortune. We solicit investigation, glad to call and give full particulars as these holdings will bear out every statement we make. Do not put it off. We offer a limited acreage now at $20 per acre in not less than five-acre blocks. Sixty days from now this land will be out of reach of those of moderate means.

OIL PROPERTY—
For Sale, Exchange, Lease, Wanted.

WANTED—OIL. OIL. OIL—

Is there oil in Imperial Valley? Geologists say there is. Bankers and business men, after thoroughly investigating, are spending hundreds of thousands in drilling. Oil map of California shows Imperial Valley in direct line between California oil fields and Tampico. Brawley well reliably reported down 1500 feet, heavy gas pressure, expecting to strike oil in next few hundred feet which would immediately treble prices. Lived in El Centro, through abstract company secured open tracts, personally located claims which join and are in immediate vicinity of four wells drilling. Recorded our claims, complied with law in every respect. Will sell part of leases to those who are financially able to take an oil chance. 10 to 160 acres at reasonable prices. Eight going together taking 160 acres is cheaper, and can hold or drill as others are doing. We give quit-claim deed. A chance that takes little money, will make you rich if they strike oil. If looking for oil risk, our leases give big odds to win. Are not brokers, have limited number acres. Address R, box 405 TIMES BRANCH OFFICE.

ORANGE, LEMON AND WALNUT GROVES—For Sale and Exchange.

For Sale.

FOR SALE—ORANGE COUNTY GROVES.

We know we can satisfy anyone who honestly wants a good grove property, for we have listed, at all times, some of the choicest groves that are for sale in all Orange county. You will find just a few of our splendid "buys" briefly described here:

5 acres, beautifully situated for home, close in, main road, best neighborhood. House, barn, water-stocked, piped. Half very fine Valencia oranges, just coming into bearing; half bearing lemons, Valencias, walnuts and family fruits. $18,000. Terms.

5 acres bearing walnuts, splendidly situated in high-class neighborhood, with nice bungalow home, abundance of water, pipe lines, etc. $10,000.

8 acres 4-year Valencia oranges, no buildings, electric pumping plant; close to school. $16,000. This is especially attractive, either for resale or to keep for income.

11 acres at Garden Grove, 3½ acres bearing budded walnuts, balance vacant; has been rented for $40 per acre cash rent. Close to town, own pumping plant, 5-room California house, other buildings. A good "buy" at $8000.

11 acres Valencias, with one of the most beautiful homes around Orange. Part bearing, part young. Income last year about $6000 net. Increasing yearly. Price $45,000, with splendid terms.

20 acres near Orange, one of the oldest groves in the district and packing-house receipts will prove it to be a splendid opportunity at $2500 per acre, for the owner is retiring from active business life and will take small payment down with 6 per cent. on balance, if purchaser is right and will care for grove. Splendid improvements, new and modern, with good location. Fully water-stocked.

20 acres all Valencia oranges, mostly 5 years old, with own water, good soil, house and barn, at $65,000. A splendid income grove home.

8, 12, 16 or 24 acres of as choice a piece of grove property as there is in all Orange county. This grove, just coming into full bearing, with every tree alike, splendid uniform soil. Main paved boulevard location, with gas and electricity available, also with an abundance of water. Is growing into larger value every 6 months and is a splendid opportunity for anyone at $3200 per acre. No one can appreciate this proposition without personally looking it over and comparing it with other properties that are held at around the same figure.

30 acres full-bearing Valencias, situated on main boulevard, with strictly high-class improvements, own water, large crop set, at $200,000. Packing-house receipts for years past will prove this a high-class investment at above figure. Legitimate reason for selling, and as drilling for oil will soon begin adjoining this grove, there is a possible chance along that line for this, though it has not been leased.

BUSINESS CHANCES—
Of Many Kinds.

THE READERS OF THE LOS ANGELES TIMES have read so many ads of this kind over our name the last few years, that we almost feel that it is unnecessary to keep spending our money on this kind of advertising. The fact remains, nevertheless, that there are so many new people coming here all the time, that we want them also to know that there is one concern in this city at least that is not afraid to refuse to work on a proposition (regardless of the commission there might be in it) if it does not stand up to our idea. We are not hungry enough for money to handle any old thing that comes along, but on the other hand, do make a personal inspection of everything offered for sale through this office. And we not only list them, but sell them, too, yes, indeed, we do, in fact we are kept so busy that we sometimes wish business would let up a little and give us time to collect our thoughts on the different things we have in our office. We are never too busy, though, to give our time to a new client, whether its something you have to sell or something you want to buy. So, Mr. Newcomer, let's get acquainted, come up and see whether we will stand the proof of the above statements.

BUSINESS CHANCES—

YOU CAN MAKE MONEY—CAN YOU INVEST IT?

There is no infallible rule of safety in investments, but where precaution is exercised it is possible to protect your money and make it as safe as all human foresight can make it so—as well as bring you large returns without impairing the principal. The oil situation of the Mid-Continent Texas and the more recent oil fields offers an almost unlimited opportunity of making large profits on small investment. Shares in successful companies which not so long ago were selling for "cents" are now paying large dividends and selling for more than they originally cost. Many small investors have found themselves comparatively rich in a fortnight. However, do not let your eagerness to make big profits mislead you. Let the OIL PRESS guide you—it is brimful of valuable data and important news about the oil companies—their prospects and more recent startling successes—as well as analytical reports of scores of companies—some good, bad and indifferent. A recent issue of the OIL PRESS, together with a late copy of the "Markets," which contains quotations of listed and unlisted, active and inactive oil stocks, will be sent free on request, and while they last a new, accurate colored map of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas featuring the oil fields in red. Address OIL PRESS, 1502 Republic Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

ASKS APPROPRIATION FOR STREET LIGHTS.

While many sections of Los Angeles are asking the City Council to provide street lights as a matter of safety and protection, City Electrician Manahan finds the funds of his department so depleted that he cannot comply with these petitions. He has filed a report, which will go to the City Council tomorrow, showing the number of such applications on file, and requesting that an appropriation of $2000 be made from the general expense fund for the purpose of giving lighting services in the districts where it is most needed.

CENSUS COUNT TO BE CHECKED.

Chamber of Commerce Plans Full Verification.

Service Council and Others to Recanvass City.

Call for 2000 Volunteers to Complete Task.

To secure a complete check on the census enumeration in this city the Chamber of Commerce will utilize the Council of Community Service organization and the assistance of hundreds of other volunteer workers in a house-to-house canvass that is designed to cover every home in Los Angeles this week. The work will be done to help Census Supervisor Dodson in making doubly certain that Los Angeles shall have official credit for her entire population before the supervisor's books are finally closed and the total becomes a matter of record that cannot be changed.

A call went out yesterday from the chamber for all the 2000 workers of the Council of Community Service, a war-work organization headed by Mrs. J. T. Anderson, that has since remained intact and has assisted in numerous civic undertakings. These workers are asked to meet with Mrs. Anderson at 9 a.m. tomorrow at room 12, City Hall. There they will receive instructions and blanks on which they will enter the names of persons they find whom the census enumerators have missed. Then they will go into every precinct in the city and begin a house-to-house check.

It is proposed that in this check every inhabitant of every house in the city shall be accounted for. Those that are actual residents and have not been included in the census enumeration will be listed. These lists will be turned over to the census authorities and enumerators will be sent to find the omitted citizens and regularly quiz them.

The chamber proposes to use the services of each individual worker, in making this check, only about one day. Therefore, many workers besides those to come from the committee of Community Service will be needed.

To assure a quick and accurate canvass, business houses are asked to send to the Chamber of Commerce Tuesday morning good, reliable men, who can carry on the house-to-house inquiry. One man from each business house would be a fair quota, it is considered, and with proper co-operation the entire check can be made by Friday.

Then, officials of the chamber point out, they will be supplied with data that will be of the greatest value to the census supervisor, not only in completing the "clean-up" process of the census count, but also in forming a just conclusion as to the thoroughness with which the enumeration has been made.

In announcing its plans for the canvass the Chamber of Commerce yesterday gave out a statement to the effect that tens of thousands of names that should be included in the city's census returns have not been obtained by the enumerators. The recheck of the population now proposed is vital, the statement continues, because the representation of Los Angeles in the Legislature and in Congress depends upon it, not to mention apportionments of State school funds and Federal funds that are based on census returns. Whatever total is shown by the books when they are closed by the census supervisor must stand for ten years, right or wrong.

AD WOLGAST IS SUED FOR MAINTENANCE.

WIFE DEMANDS $250 MONTHLY; AFRAID HUSBAND WILL WASTE PROPERTY.

Ad Wolgast, ex-lightweight champion pugilist of the world, was sued for separate maintenance by Mrs. Mildred Wolgast yesterday. She demands support of $250 a month and asks that her husband be restrained from disposing of his property pending a hearing of her suit. She claims he owns four pieces of real estate and stock in the Altamont syndicate valued at $10,000.

Mrs. Wolgast alleges that Mr. Wolgast is incompetent to manage his estate and will squander it unless he is restrained by the court.

The Wolgasts were married in Grand Rapids, Mich., February 14, 1911, and separated February 16, 1917. It is charged in the complaint that Mr. Wolgast has failed to contribute anything to his wife's support since he is said to have deserted her. She says she has been forced to sell her jewelry and other personal property to support herself.

Mr. Wolgast, who some time ago was declared competent to handle his affairs by Judge Rives, blames his troubles on his wife's relatives. He also claimed that he was inveigled into a sanitarium in the East. His wife was appointed guardian, but was succeeded by another person.

SCORE OIL-WELL LAW.

Owners Declare Five Horse Power Engine is Inadequate.

Notification has been issued by C. A. Blackmar, city oil inspector, to owners and operators of oil wells throughout the city that the ordinance is in full effect which prohibits the maintenance and operation of motors or gas engines of more than five horse power capacity for the purpose of pumping oil wells in the residential districts. The result will be, say oil well operators, that an attempt will be made to secure a repeal of the ordinance, and should this fail its validity will be attacked in the courts.

It is said that more than 400 oil wells are in operation within the city limits, with an output of approximately 1000 barrels of oil per day. None of them are heavy producers, and it has been found necessary, as a matter of economy, to connect several of the wells with one pumping plant, which requires more than five horse power for its operation.

CLOTHES PRICE NOT TOO HIGH.

People Now Have Money to Buy, Says Maker.

Work is Abundant and Men All are Well Paid.

Gotham Manufacturer Makes a Comparison.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—"Most people seem to think that clothes prices are high. Measured in the number of dollars it takes to purchase a suit they are. But measured in the prices of things which the producer has to sell, or in the wages paid for service performed they are no higher than they were before the war. In many instances, as a matter of fact, they are not so high," according to a leading clothing manufacturer.

"Compare clothes prices, for instance, with that of corn, the great American money crop. In 1914 the Iowa farmer had to haul fifty bushels of corn to market in order to get the money to pay for a $25 suit of clothes. Now he can get a $60 suit and a $10 pair of shoes for his fifty bushels of corn.

"It may be that he doesn't haul corn to market, but feeds it to his hogs. On December 30, 1914, he had to sell 400 pounds of hogs at the top price of the Chicago market to get the money to pay for a $25 suit and a $3 hat. On December 30, 1919, if he sold 400 pounds of hogs at the top price of the Chicago market he came within $3 of receiving the money to buy a $60 suit and there have been long periods in the last two years when he would have got from $80 to $92 for his 400 pounds of hogs.

PRICE OF STEERS.

"If, on December 30, 1914, he marketed a 1000-pound corn-fed steer at the top price of the Chicago market he got $91.50 for it. If he marketed it on December 30, 1919, for the top price, he got $195 for it—money enough to buy a pretty nice outfit of clothes even at present prices.

"Wheat is raised in very wide sections of the country. Official government reports tell us that the average farm value of wheat on November 1, 1914, was 77 cents a bushel. The farmer who sold fifty bushels of it got $38.50, or just about enough to buy a $25 suit, a $5 pair of shoes, a $3 hat, two or three good shirts, and then some handkerchiefs. The farm value of wheat on November 1, 1919, was $2.13 a bushel and the farmer who sold fifty bushels at his home station received $106.50, or enough to buy him a fine $60 suit and a big thick overcoat. If a farmer happens to live in the Northwest and to have held his wheat until now he can get somewhere near $3 a bushel for grain of good quality.

"While we are talking about the Northwest, it may be well to mention the farmer who raises flaxseed. The government tells us that on the first of November, 1914, he received an average of $1.187 per bushel at the farm stations for his seed. For twenty-five bushels he got just about enough money for his $25 suit and a hat. If he marketed his flaxseed on November 1, 1919, he got on an average of $3.82 a bushel at the home station. For twenty-five bushels he got $95.50—enough to pay for his $60 suit and leave $35.50 for hat, shoes and furnishings for the winter.

"You may think the Northwest is particularly favored territory, but let's look at the South, where they raise cotton. We all remember how in the fall of 1914 the "buy a bale of cotton" campaign was on to save the producer from ruin.

PRICE OF COTTON.

"The price of cotton in the fall of 1914 was down to 6 cents a pound for a time, but that's hardly a fair comparison. Let's go back to November 1, 1913, when the average farm price was 13 cents a pound. The farmer then had to market 192 pounds of cotton to pay for a $25 suit. On November 1, 1919, the average farm price was 36.5 cents a pound and the grower could pay for a $60 suit by selling only 165 pounds of cotton.

"The prosperity of the worker is no longer adequately measured by his wage rate per hour. Five years ago work was scarce; a large percentage of workers expected to be idle many days in the year. Now there is demand for the service of every available man in practically every trade, not only for forty-four or forty-eight hours a week, at regular pay, but for many hours of overtime at double pay.

"Is it any wonder that the demand for clothes is enormous? Producer and worker alike have more money, in proportion, to spend for clothes, than they ever had before. They want good clothes, too, and are creating an unusual demand for them."

WHY DO THEY DO IT?

It has long been the fashion at colleges and schools to take a census of graduating classes to determine such vital facts as these: What is your favorite flower? How tall are you? Do you smoke? Are you a prohibitionist?

At a girl's seminary a recent inquiry was more sweeping. To the interrogation: "Do you swear?" 200 of the 215 girls answered yes.

But admitting that they swear is no proof that these feminine lips do utter oaths. So at least says the law in New York State, writes "Griant" in the Philadelphia Press. "Four or five people" must hear you swear, not for a second or two, but "for about five minutes"—that's the law in North Carolina.

Down in Alabama they don't expect a man to swear from the housetops, but the law says that if three or four persons hear you just once, good night!

In Tennessee it is not necessary to repeat the offensive words when the culprit is indicted for swearing.

I saw on the veranda of a country club seventeen women, of whom twelve were drinking an intoxicating liquor and seven were smoking cigarettes.

But if that census at the girls' seminary is an index, more women swear than daily with John Barleycorn or Lady Nicotine.

Query: Why do women insist on being so much like men?

LIFE FROM TWO VIEWPOINTS.

Novels by Eden Phillpotts and Gilbert Cannan, Dealing with Discontented Wives and the Philosophy of Youth.

STORM IN A TEACUP. By Edna Phillpotts. The Macmillan Company.

A wholesome book written from a mildly philosophic point of view by a man who is able to look upon life with a pleasantly humorous gaze is this latest work of the author of "The Three Brothers."

While it is in no sense a great book, it is a readable one. Its value to many will be enhanced by its setting, in Devonshire among working folk employed in a paper mill. The fascination that lies in every industrial process by which commodities that cater to the needs of man are created out of raw materials otherwise worthless is cleverly used by Mr. Phillpotts in his description of the manufacture of handmade paper. He knows the art from the beginning, when the rags first come to the mill, to the end, when the finest and best quality of paper is turned out ready for distribution.

Medora, possessed with good looks but no mentality or strength of character, is one of the mill-workers. When the story opens we see her married to Ned Dingle, simple-minded, good-natured and that anomaly among workingmen today, contented—contented with his job, with his wife, with his home and with himself. But not so with Medora. She finds life too tame for her, too monotonous, too lacking in the savor that she craves. In this mood she turns to Jordan Kellock, vatman at the works by day, labor leader and reformer all the time. To Medora, Jordan's ideas of reform, of change, of progress hold high promise. Not that she is interested in the cause of labor or in any other cause but that of Medora, but she is bored, tired of having her own way, longing for green fields and pastures new.

There is a good bit of psychology in the analysis of Medora, who deliberately creates a false position between herself and her husband, fostering the belief first in her own mind and then in that of her friends and of her erstwhile lover, Jordan, that she is a sadly mistreated wife. When she finally drives her husband to distraction, so that he loses his temper and treats her with some harshness, she throws herself on Jordan's tender mercy, and he, the righter of wrongs, agrees to elope with her.

The brotherly relation that Jordan insists upon taking and maintaining toward Medora, until such a time as Ned may choose to obtain a divorce and so enable the elopers to marry, is described with a lightly humorous touch that makes the situation seem more tenable than it is. The result of all this is worked out rather slowly, leaving no element of doubt as to the outcome at any time in the mind of the reader.

It is a good book for discontented wives, written entirely from a man's point of view, with the moral not too obtrusive.

Pink Roses.

PINK ROSES. By Gilbert Cannan. George H. Doran Company, New York.

From Eden Phillpotts's commonsense philosophy of life we turn to something far different in Gilbert Cannan's latest work of fiction, "Pink Roses." Gilbert Cannan is one of a group of young men, well represented on both sides of the Atlantic, who survey the world and find it not at all to their taste. Their quarrel is not with life as they think it should be lived, but with the generations that preceded them, with those of their elders who still presume to have a hand in affairs and who cling to established institutions and generally accepted codes.

The world is for the young; our forefathers have made a sad mess of things; we must, perforce, be a law unto ourselves and so light a new torch to take the place of the smoky flame that has led civilization too long. Specifically, it is the war that is attacked, and that is declared to be the final proof of the failure of the generation that fathered the young men of today. The exact age limit beyond which the brain ceases to function and the soul to ferment is not given, but it seems to be somewhere in the late twenties. The author also neglects to indicate the willingness of his little group of callow intellectuals to abdicate at thirty or thereabouts in favor of the youngsters who are now trotting about in knickerbockers but who in another half-dozen years will be ready to give new truth and new purpose to the world.

Yet, try as we may, in reading "Pink Roses" we fail to get a clear idea of the proper conduct of life. Pink Roses, which to many superannuated relicts who lived three decades or over signify beauty and purity and a promise of divinity, represent to this most sophisticated author the lure of the senses, passion, illicit love. For it was the pink roses worn by the woman of the streets, Cora Dinmont, that caused Trevor Mathew, the pure and high-minded hero, to seek sanctuary in her arms. The war, which he viewed from afar, had quite upset this petted child, had gotten on his nerves, don't you know, so that he found life an altogether beastly thing, thanks to the mismanagement of affairs by his elders. So our Sir Galahad turns to Cora for a year and finds there the tonic his tender sensibilities require.

That such association sullied his high soul or is in any way to be condemned or even deplored is far from the thought of our author. Trevor passes through the experience unscathed, drops it all like an outworn garment at the end, and turns to Ruth Hobday, who had also had her little fling, and we leave these two whose purity is a thing apart from their life and conduct, to regenerate the world when there shall be enough of their kind to make their impress.

But with all its false ethics, its lack of morality, its destructive philosophy, its eruptive banalities, the book is a remarkably clever one, emanating from a seething brain that is so full of ideas that there is no time to organize them. The characters, if not always true to life as adults see it, are distinct and compelling. The handling of the money-making Hebrew, if it lacks charity, is at least scintillatingly clever; clever, too, is the parody on the Russian worshiping fad that besets certain artistic souls; and sickeningly clever is the description of Estelle, Cora's colored maid.

When Gilbert Cannan recovers from the colic engendered in him by the war, and gets over his worship of youth—which he is bound to do, he was born in 1884—he may become as great an author and philosopher as he now thinks he is.

WHITE SHADOWS in the SOUTH SEAS

By FREDERICK O'BRIEN

THIS is that travel book of the South Seas which lifts people away to strange, beautiful, far-away scenes, entertains them with extraordinary adventures, makes them laugh a thousand times, and touches their hearts with a story of epic nobility. (A Century book. 63 full-page illustrations from photographs. Price $4.00. At all book-stores.)

"A novel we recommend to our best friends"

Slippy McGee

By MARIE CONWAY OEMLER

THIS is that utterly delightful love story of the South for which a Boston man with weak eyes, having heard it read to him, paid $900 to have a single copy printed in larger type so that he could read it with his own eyes. It has the kind charm that made "Daddy Long-Legs" famous. (A Century book. Price $1.75. At all book-stores.)

¶ "A Woman Named Smith," the author's latest novel of the South, is in the same rich vein as "Slippy McGee." Price $1.75 at all book-stores.

GOOD BOOKS FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Public Library Shelves Teem with Interesting Stories for Young and Old.

BY MONICA SHANNON.

Germany was financed by means of "executive budgets" and to that Edward A. Fitzpatrick, Ph.D., lays all her deviltry. Mr. Fitzpatrick's book, "Budget Making in a Democracy," is a vivid piece of writing and a careful piece of thinking. When we remember that it was said in the United States Senate that the United States government could be run effectively at a saving of three hundred million dollars a year, we are eager to listen to this convincing, interesting Mr. Fitzpatrick, who is Draft Administrator of Wisconsin and who knows so much about budgets, one would suppose he had been born with a budget in his mouth instead of a silver spoon.

Charles M. Schwab once said, "there are more jobs for forceful men than there are forceful men to fill them." Enoch Burton Gowin has a new book, just off the Ronald Press. It is called "Developing Executive Ability," and it tells how Judge Gary nonchalantly tows a billion-dollar corporation while other men are frantically busy pushing a corner grocery. It is a remarkable book; large in its scope; clear in its presentation and at the same time alertly interesting.

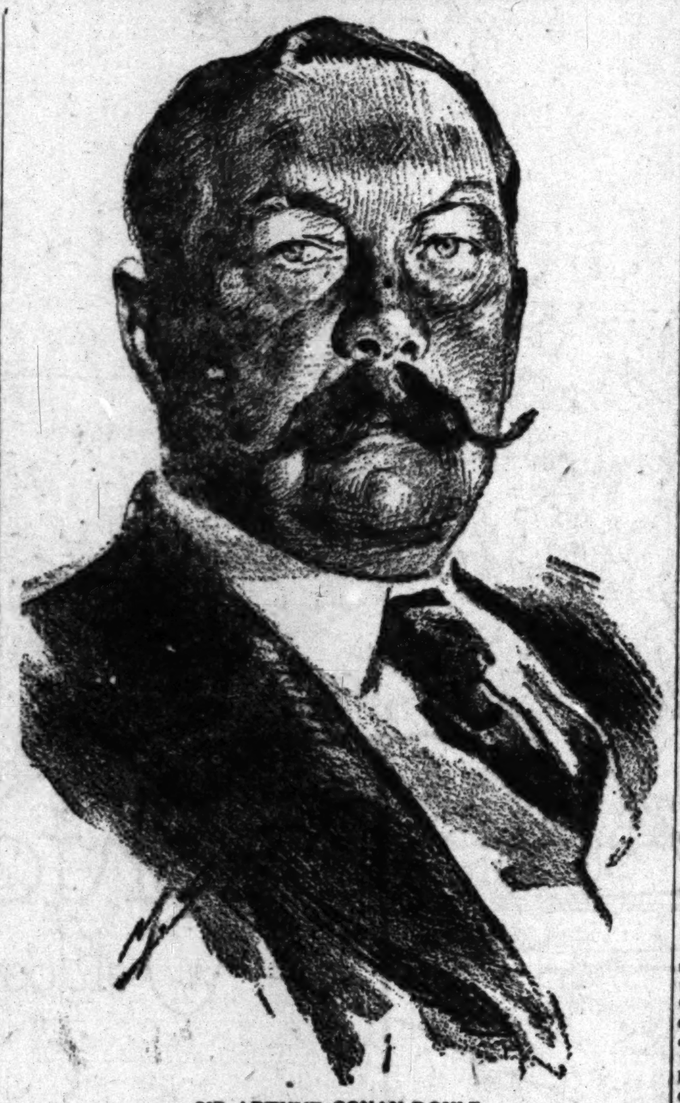
There is an amazingly good book of the wandering man—and one could count the amazingly good books of travels on one's five fingers. "Eothen," by William Kinglake, is a buoyant, wonderful book. Youth blows through its pages and it gives you an East which is passing.

Women who love oak rafters with hooks for home-fed hams; big wooden settees and gardens with Michaelmas daisies, will delight in a book called "The Flower-Patch Among the Hills," by Flora Klickmann, an Englishwoman. It is very droll, altogether delightful and written with real finesse.

Father and mother having been disposed of for at least a week, we now turn our attention to little Johnny, who needn't squirm because he is only going to be offered something from a treasure chest of books.

W. H. Hudson, who wrote "Green Mansions" and many wonderful things, has made a story for children called "Little Boy Lost." Not even Aladdin's lamp brought him anything quite so precious as this book. And had Cinderella's godmother given her this story, that pretty maiden would have sat at home in the ashes to finish it, instead of going to the ball, and the Prince would have had to content himself with a bride who had much larger feet. That certainly must be the reason Cinderella's fairy godmother didn't write it for her.

Walter de la Mare has caught most of the elusive magic in the world between the covers of his "Peacock Pie." And if a fairy should come and ask me today to make a wish, I would wish to be a little boy with one of those nice tailor-made-looking bull terriers and a mother who would read me "Peacock Pie."



SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE

CONAN DOYLE'S VITAL MESSAGE.

THE VITAL MESSAGE. By Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. George H. Doran Company, New York.

The author opens his dissertation concerning that which he believes to be the Vital Message of the time, by an inquiry into the cause and object of the great war. He believes these to have been religious rather than political. "The shock of the war," he says, "was meant to rouse us to mental and moral earnestness, to give us courage to tear away venerable shams, and to force the human race to realize and use the vast new revelation." The revelation to which he refers is the—to him—proven possibility of intercourse between incarnate and discarnate spirits.

The author informs us of his conviction that two great religious readjustments ought to be made in order that the new spiritual development may be fully utilized for human benefit. The first of these is that the Old Testament must cease to be regarded as a religious document, and relegated to the shelf of the scholar. He points out some facts which no candid mind can deny, namely, that the Old Testament represents the Almighty as commanding massacres as brutal as were recently committed by the Turks, religious pogroms as cruel as those which Russia and Poland launched against the Jews, invasions of territories of peaceful neighbors matching the German rape of Belgium, and that it condones polygamy, allows slavery, and orders the burning of so-called witches. These dreadful teachings, says the author, are not a dead letter, but are continually acted upon, and always will be as long as the Old Testament remains part of our Sacred Book. "All the most hard-hearted brutes in history," of whom he gives an extended list, ending with Kaiser Wilhelm, "found either their inspiration before the event or their justification afterward in this book."

The second readjustment of our religion ought to be the shifting of the emphasis now placed upon the death of Christ to "His uniqque and superhuman life." Since He declared that He came "to show us the Father" the weight ought to be placed where He placed it. "Had the example of Christ's life been insisted upon as the basis of religion, all the religious wars and the private feuds would have been minimized, if not entirely avoided."

The new spiritual influence which is now developing the psychic side of religion gives the certainty of a definite life after death, assures us of Christ as the gentle, loving and powerful spirit which broods over the world which in all its many spheres is his special care. "It eschews all theological dogma and makes each man responsible for his own spiritual development, a responsibility which can be shifted to no other shoulders. If religious theologians, "those curses of mankind," are shifted to the outer darkness and we accept the simple truths of spiritual religion, "there will come to us the greatest reinforcement of morality which the human race has ever known."....

This movement, which is thus destined to bring vitality to religion, is called "Modern Spiritualism."

The remainder of "The Vital Message" is devoted to a recapitulation of the results obtained from psychical research, and a list of the great men actively interested therein. This list proves that the movement can no longer be ignored and that its advocates are entitled by their mental and moral worth to a respectful hearing.

The only reasonable attitude to take by those of us who lack the leisure or the inclination to investigate the possibilities of this branch of science for ourselves, is a respectful toleration. To stigmatize such intelligent and conscientious students as fools, dupes or fakirs, as has recently been editorially done by at least one widely circulated publication, is to write oneself down as a peculiarly perfect specimen of petrified ass.

CALIFORNIA LIFE.

THE SMILING HILL TOP. By Julia M. Sloane. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

A pleasingly whimsical account of life in Southern California is this, cram full of human interest, of clever turns, of rare bits of description—

"Quips and cranks and wanton wiles, Nods and becks and wreathed smiles."

The "Smiling Hill Top" is an adobe hill, somewhere between Pasadena and San Diego, capped with "a red-tiled bungalow built about a courtyard with cloisters and a fountain, while vines and flowers fill the air with the most delicious perfume of heliotrope, mignonette, and jasmine."

Hither came a New England family of six, "two grown-ups, two boys, and two dogs," and one of the grown-ups with pleasing touch writes in a happy, chatty mood free from gush of gardeners and thorns, movies and marketing, motors and real estate agents, war work and peace loafing, weaving with skill the tapestry of life in "the land of the second chance, of dreams come true, of freshness and opportunity, of the wideness of out-of-doors—'Sunkist'!"

Without the undue use of adjectives, the author makes real and vivid the charm, the lure, the freshness of life in Southern California, punctuating it all with originality and humor. That she so sedulously avoids mentioning Los Angeles does not prevent our feeling of proprietorship in the work.

The book is illustrated with drawings by Carleton M. Winslow, and has an appropriate and attractive cover design, carefully concealed by a strip of wrapping paper in lieu of the gay slip cover that most publishers are dressing their books in today.

A GROUP OF NONFICTION BOOKS.

THE LAST FOUR MONTHS. How the War Was Won. By Maj.-Gen. Sir F. Maurice, K.C.M.G., C.B. Little, Brown, & Co., Boston.

Gen. Maurice, formerly director of military operations of the British staff, has made a valuable contribution to the military history of the war in giving the details of the organization for the big drive that broke the Hindenburg line and in narrating how the score of great battles that were fought in the summer and fall of 1918 were the part of a single comprehensive plan which formed the major strategy of the 1918 campaign. Under his graphic pen the confused mass straightens into a direct line. He shows how the individual conflicts were so many scenes that combine to make the great play of which the stage was the whole of Eastern Europe and the actors were numbered in millions.

Gen. Maurice is well fitted in intellect, learning and experience for this titanic task. Tactics and strategy are alike familiar to him; and he was far enough removed from the smoke of battle to gain a clear vision of the whole field. He had at his command reports of the Allied commanders and the histories of the campaign written by Ludendorff and other of the German commanders. What could not be written while the conflict was in progress, for strategical reasons, can now be told.

It was but natural, perhaps, that he should make Tommy Atkins the hero among the fighting men and should attach what may seem to French and American strategists undue attention to what was taking place on the northern end of the line. Only neutrals could write the story of the campaign without the element of favoritism cropping out; and the field for neutral writers is decidedly limited. But Gen. Maurice has evidently striven for impartiality in the collection of his facts. If Tommy Atkins keeps the center of the stage, the "poilu" and the "Sammy" are always present in the background.

The maps are not the least valuable part of the volume. And those who read the book to the end will close it with a clearer vision of the last campaign of the war than it was possible to get from the disjointed and unconnected accounts that appeared while it was actually in progress. To discuss that campaign intelligently one must have read "The Last Four Months" by Gen. Maurice.

THE HEALTH OF THE TEACHER. By Dr. William Estabrook Chancellor. Forbes & Co., Chicago.

Health, strength and joy for all teachers is the purpose of this important book by Dr. Chancellor. From the stress of added work during war times teachers in general have awakened to the truth that they have been overlooking in the past a very serious matter, the control of their own health. It is deplorable and unnecessary that the death rate is much higher in the teaching profession than in most other trades and professions; it has a higher death rate from tuberculosis than any other occupation. After only a few years of service the health of the majority of teachers becomes impaired, and statistics show that they are obliged to retire from activity much earlier than people engaged in business and other professions. With such a condition in the profession which is the foundation of the nation the need for this, the first book to treat the subject of health control of teachers, is apparent.

SPIRITUAL VOICES IN MODERN LITERATURE. By Trevor M. Davis, D.D. Charles H. Doran Company, New York.

The writer of this book, who is the pastor of a fashionable church in Toronto, was not only really searching for spiritual but for ecclesiastical voices in modern literature. This is to say that he deliberately proposed to exploit literature for the purpose of buttressing dogma—or to quote him verbatim: "My theme and my aims were fixed. I was not attempting essays in literature but the enforcement of truths to which the church stands committed." So he proceeds to wrest the thoughts of mighty men to his own purposes, evidently without suspicion of the unpardonable casuistry of such a proceeding.

However, we easily surrender Gladstone and the footling Smethson to his clerical designs; and with some affectionate qualms give up Ruskin also; for although Ruskin was not a churchman he was an avowed teacher of ethics. But when this devotional author attempts to force great poets and romancers into theological procrustianism we register vigorous protest.

Doctors of divinity are doubtless useful and worthy members of society. But there are some aspects of truth which this type of mind seems incapable of discussing. For instance, it cannot penetrate the nature nor grasp the function of true poetry. It is vain to attempt the pumping of theological subtleties out of the fountains of spiritual life; for while poetry is—as Goldsmith has said—"the nurse of every virtue," it never preaches. To force it into the service of particular "doxies" is a blunder so colossal as to constitute a sin and ought to be a capital crime as well.

For the rest the discourses are well and clearly written. Their author has much erudition and a popular style. If his life had been passed in England one could not help suspecting him of being the dissenting clergyman whom Shaw immortalized in "Candida." His book will doubtless be appreciated by those who approve of making poetry the hand-maiden of theology.

WALPOLE IS TO LECTURE HERE.

Distinguished English Novelist will Address Los Angeles Women's Clubs.

Hugh Seymour Walpole, distinguished English novelist, will lecture in Los Angeles next week. He will speak at the Ebell Club at 2:30 tomorrow afternoon; at the Friday Morning Club at 11 o'clock Friday morning and he will appear before the Women's University Club at the Ebell Club rooms Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Walpole has a very distinguished literary background. He is a direct descendent of the great Horace and Robert Walpole and is himself the son of the Bishop of Edinburg, though he was born in Auckland, New Zealand, in 1884. He lived in New York for three years, 1886 to 1889. On his return to England he took up school teaching as a vocation.

He was discouraged for a time but ultimately he sent one of his manuscripts to a publisher and his first book of importance, "The Wooden Horse," was brought out in 1909. Since then he has written "The Gods and Mr. Perrin," "Maradick at Forty," "The Prelude to Adventure," "Fortitude," "The Duchess of Wrexe," "The Green Mirror," "Jeremy," "The Dark Forest," and "The Secret City," all of which have been published in the United States by George H. Doran Company, New York.

HUGH WALPOLE

The Man and His Works

The presence of this distinguished young English novelist recalls that of Charles Dickens, who, at the age of 30, visit to the "States." There is more than an arbitrary names in the linking of Walpole with Dickens, for soil for the first time since he was eight years old conspicuously, is carrying on the finest traditions of the reviving in his books the rich, spirited and beautiful tender emotions that stamped the pages of Fielding, Dickens for what they were.

Almost at once the boat pulled up alongside and grappled the Charon with steel hooks, while the cries of the ladies brought the men up from the cabin. Everybody was in consternation, only Gladys B. Liberia exclaiming "Gee, now at last I'm going to get this pirate stuff straight!"

The god-stars, alas, were all unarmed, and even though Bill H. Hercules and Tommy Mars duplicated their feats of prowess that you've seen 'em do a hundred times on the screen, the handsome heroes were so outnumbered by the pirates, who were armed to the teeth (it would be a bum pirate that wasn't armed to the teeth, wouldn't it?) that even when they saw the fell purpose of the fellows was to carry off the lady stars, they—bound and gagged and thrown below into the Charon's depths—were unable to do anything about it.

"And this," said Bill H. Hercules, speaking as well as he could through his gag, "is one time when I'm darned glad there isn't any camera about!"

"Well, anyhow," said Bryant W. Apollo, "though it may sound frivolous at such a moment, I'm glad to say I've a pattern of the costume that musical comedy pirate wore that got me! I'm expecting to play a pirate pretty soon, and that certainly will come in handy."

Meanwhile the goddess stars were being carried into the pirate ship, though be it said to their credit they put up a good stiff fight, for which they were naturally in training after fighting the villian all their professional lives. They were huddled into a dark cabin, but presently the lights were turned on and they found themselves in a comfortable room. Tremblingly, they listened to the tramp of feet above their heads, which came below, and finally settled down in a near-by cabin. After a while the door opened and the pirate chief stood before them. He was a big fellow with a fierce red mustache, and, his eyes roving around the silent room, he finally called Mary Pickford Minerva forward. Giving him one of her famous smiles she waited for him to speak.

"Come in here!" he commanded, beckoning to the next cabin. She tremblingly obeyd. Then, instead of jerking her rudely about, he remarked in a low, confidential voice, "Pirating, young woman, may look good to you, but it ain't what it used to be."

"I should say not," spoke up a peevish voice behind him. "Since the war, us boys is fed up on atrocities. Them Germans just stole our stuff, that's all. Them and the picture companies ain't left us no patronage at all. Why they ain't even writing about us any more. We can't get no publicity. I just bet there hasn't been a pirate story written in fifteen years!"

"Well," acquiesced Mary soothingly, "I suppose the pirate business ain't what it's cracked up to be. Neither is the picture business."

"Sometimes," went on the chief gloomily, "we've thought of going into the picture business ourselves."

"Well, it won't be the first time there were pirates in the business," responded Mary warmly. "There's a whole pirate push on the job right now!"

In the next cabin, a very large one, the pirates were gathered, some of them eating sandwiches after their hard hour's work, some pasting pictures in books, while an odd clicking sound came from certain parts of the room.

"Come in and hear what we've decided to do with you!" commanded the chief.

"Will—will we be killed?" demanded Mary, her teeth chattering, "or made to walk the plank?"

"Oh, no, that's old stuff!" said the chief, contemptuously.

Then up rose the spokesman. He was a dark man with his mustache done up in curl-papers. He had rushed right down and put it up in papers as soon as he knew there were ladies aboard.

"We've decided," he said, "to hold you girls for ransom! We know who you are, and it wouldn't do us no good to kill you. Besides, a lot of us boys don't believe in capital punishment no more."

MARY WEAKENS.

Mary nearly fainted as she thought of weeks, and perhaps months, aboard this awful place, while the United Artists waited vainly for her next picture. Then she shaw what it was that made the clicking sound, and what the papers were, the pirates were pasting in books. The pictures were photographs of film stars, and the clicking sound proceeded from knitting needles wielded by the pirates! The pirate chief blushed painfully when he saw Mary looking at them.

"They learned it off an old lady they captured during the war," he said, "and I can't do nothing about it. You see every time I complained of anything during the war, the boys threatened to desert and work in the war munitions, and so I had to let 'em keep on doing as they pleased. When tired of playing poker, they knit."

"Oh, yes, us boys have more fun!" said a little blond pirate glancing up.

"What are you knitting?" asked Mary.

"Well, miss, that's where the game comes in. We start on something, and then it probably turns into something else. We all have big bets as to what a thing is going to turn out to be!"

The chief cast down his eyes in mortification. "The boys ain't got no pep no more!" was all he said.

Mary braced up bravely and went back to tell the others the pirates' decision, and to bring them in to hear the reading of the schedules of ransoms.

"Oh dear, if Tommy Mars were only here," sighed Hebe Bebe.

"Well, anyhow," remarked Mary M. Clytie, "we don't have to listen to Bryant Apollo talking about kids!"

"Nor," snapped Norma T. Luna, "to sister Connie telling how good she'd be if she only had a good story!"

Then they all went in to hear the schedule read.

"Mary M. Clytie," began the spokesman, "$500,000. Mary P. Minerva, $600,000—"

CHIPS BEGIN TO FLY.

"Well, I don't see how you make that out!" began Mary Minter Clytie. But the pirate went right on. "Hebe Bebe Daniels, $100,000; Gloria Swanson $50,000—"

Gloria S. Penelope rose right up in her wrath. "My salary—" she began, but the red-headed chief glared as hard as he could at so pretty a woman and she sat down.

Mary P. Minerva exclaimed in a stage whisper to her sister: "Keep still, girls, I'm getting an idea!"

"Betty Compson Helen, $30,000. Norma T. Luma, $400,000—"

"Well, I like that!" interrupted Betty, "I was known in comedy before—"

"Oh, well, didn't I do a comedy once?" exclaimed Norma.

"Ladies! Ladies!" admonished the head pirate.

"Besides," said Betty, "your nose and chin will meet some day!"

"Oh, well, yours won't unless it goes around the other way!"

"Anyhow it'll take longer!" answered Betty.

"Ladies, ladies, for heaven's sake be calm!" said the captain, looking as if he wished he hadn't undertaken his kidnaping job. In fact, he called off the reading of the schedule, and the ladies were herded back to their cabin.

"Now you've done it!" accused May A. Pomona.

"Oh, girls!" entreated Mary P. Minerva. "Can you see us sitting around here waiting for our bosses to buy us back? Besides, what would become of Olympus without us? Of course, the boys will try to rescue us, but they've got to go back and arm themselves, and heaven only knows where we'll be by that time."

"And what has become of the dear boys who started out with us—all bound and gagged and everything?" moaned Mary M. Diana.

"And oh, ain't it scandalous us being aboard here with all these men!" cried Hebe Bebe. "What'll mamma think?"

"And what will the papers say!" exclaimed Gloria S. Penelope.

"They ain't seen the pirates!" snickered Gladys B. Liberia.

A dismal silence reigned for a few minutes. Then Minerva exclaimed: "Oh, girls, I've got it!"

"What?" they all cried in chorus.

"Well, you know," explained Mary, "everybody in the world believes he or she could become an actor if he or she only had a chance. Let's make these fellows believe they can act, and then when they commence fighting over which is the best, we'll sneak off in the boats!"

"Done!" declared all the ladies in chorus. So they called the pirate chief and told him they wanted to speak to some of the pirates. Presently a crowd of pirates confronted them.

"Boys," began Mary, "you've all bored stiff and sick of this life, aren't you?"

"THE FLATTERING WORD."

"Righto!" they cried in chorus. Mary looked them over slowly. Then her eyes brightened. "Everyone of you looks as if you could act!"

"Hear, hear!" shouted the pirates.

"Now, you know very well you're going to have a hard time getting away with this ransom business," she reasoned. "Suppose I promise you all a job in pictures or on the stage if you let us go!"

"Well," admitted one pirate bashfully twisting his red sash, "mother did used to say I was awful good when I recited 'Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight.'" "And," spoke up another eagerly, "You should just have heard me speak, 'A Modest Little Violet.' Want to hear it now?"

"All right," said Mary, winking over at May Allison Pomona.

Others, too, volunteered, and it was indeed a touching sight to see the big, rough fellows trying to recollect their childhood pieces spoken at Sunday-school entertainments and other innocent festivities. May Allison Pomona could not keep the tears from her eyes, as one great, rude pirate spoke his piece, beginning, 'Love, oh love, your feathered pets.'"

"There, you see," cried Mary with shining eyes, as if she were collecting funds for her favorite orphan asylum. "Now, boys, I'm going to promise you all jobs!"

Just then there was an awful rumpus outside. The pirates flew to arms and dashed up on deck, followed by the young ladies.

"It's the boys, headed by Tommy Mars, come to rescue us!" gasped the crowd. Sure enough, there on the Charon's deck stood the brave star gods, grappling the prankish pirate. The pirates reached for their swords.

"Oh, now there's going to be horrible bloodshed!" moaned Gladys Liberia. "I can't bear it. Somebody give me a cigarette!"

"The boys don't smoke!" hissed the pirate captain in her ear. "Cut it out long ago; found they do better pirating when their heads are clear!"

Just at that moment Bill H. Hercules climbed over the side of the ship, followed closely by Messrs. Tommy Mars, Bill R. Vulcan, Bill D. Saturn and the others, all with swords and pistols in their hands. The ladies cowered on the edge of the gangway. "Come on, my brave men!" yelled Bill Hercules.

Just then a whistle blew shrilly on the pirate ship.

"What's that?" gasped Hebe Bebe in fright. "Look!"

Everybody turned toward the direction in which she pointed. A great gasp of surprise went up from the ladies. All the pirates had dropped their arms and were turning to go below.

"Oh, pshaw!" said the red-headed captain chief turning a dull red. "Now there won't be nothin' doin'!"

"What, no! What's the matter," demanded Bill R. Vulcan.

"Aw," admitted the pirate chief in slow disgust, "the boys belong to the Pirates' Union, and they don't work out of hours. Wish I could get ird of 'em."

Well," spoke up Tommy M. Mars. "I noted that bunch and I think they'd make darn good chorus boys. Want a chance, boys?" he called to the retreating pirates.

"Sure," they said.

"Won't it be great, that theatrical life!" cried the pirate with the dark Lew Cody on his upper lip, as he sipped his sixth glass of 2.75 nectar.

"Only, I do hope," the little blond pirate was heard to murmur, "only I do hope the life of a chorus man ain't too rough for us boys!"

Accommodating.

The People and Their Troubles

DOROTHY DIX TALKS

How to Select a Wife.

BY DOROTHY DIX.

A young man asked me if I can tell him how to go about choosing a wife.

The first bit of advice that I should give a man contemplating matrimony is to sit down and have a quiet session with himself, and try to find out just what qualities he desires in the woman who is to be his life companion. Let him classify his own preferences, and then go out and seek a maiden who fills the bill.

Certainly it is rank idiocy for a man to marry without having taken the trouble to find out the sort of a wife he wants—whether he desires his wife to be a society woman, or a home keeper, whether a saver or a spender, whether he prefers to sing hymns with a pious wife or to go to the races with a sporty one.

Now the world is full of charming girls, any one of whom would make some man a good, suitable wife, and the trick is, for each man to find his own partner, instead of getting the other fellow's and having to go through the divorce court in order to exchange.

Success in marriage is merely a question of getting into your own class, and staying there.

Suppose, for instance, a man is a sensible, practical man who likes a well-regulated life, run on schedule time. Let him go wooing among the business women. The business woman is level-headed and reasonable, and her husband is guaranteed against hysterics, and unfounded jealous reproaches. She has learned to look at life as it is, and not to demand the impossible.

She knows that a man whose mind is cumbered with weighty affairs, and whose hands are full of a big deal, should not waste his energies on foolish household errands. Therefore, she will not ask her husband to stop on his way downtown to match a piece of elephant's breath chiffon, nor will she expect him to walk the baby at night when it has the colic.

The business woman is also a good choice for the ambitious man who wants to get on in his business and have an A-1 rating in Bradstreet, for, having earned money herself, she knows its value, and that every dollar is baptized in blood. She will not be hoodwinked by servants, or cheated by tradesmen, and having felt the fret and stress of business that wears the strongest nerves to fiddlestrings, she will be more tolerant of a man's impatience, and easier to get along with than the purely domestic woman, who thinks that going down to the office every day is nothing but a picnic.

But the business woman is no wife for the conceited man, because she is accustomed to forming her own opinions and acting on her own judgment, and no man is a little tin God to her. Nor is she the wife for the domestic tyrant, for she has celebrated her Fourth of July declaration of independence and lets no man tell her when to get off, or where she gets on. Neither will she suit the stingy man, for she has experienced the joys of her own pocketbook, and will insist on a fair divide of the family income.

The man who is fussy about his eating and who likes to dress the salad at the table and has his own chafing-dish recipes, should marry a domestic girl who likes to cook. They could never really bore each other, for hunger is a passion that springs eternal in the human breast, and they will enjoy an idyllic existence inventing new dishes, surrounded by a perpetual aroma of connubial bliss, and good cooking.

The man who has no sporting blood in his veins, and who wishes to play safe, can make no better choice than a widow. When a man marries a young girl he is undertaking to guess a conundrum, because she is still an unknown proposition. No one can tell what she will be. In ten years the lithe figure he admires so much may have degenerated into scrawniness. Or the adorable plumpness may have become fat. But if he marries a widow he knows precisely what he is getting. She has arrived. What she is going to be in mind, and character, and disposition, she already is, and so he takes no risk. She is the one safe bet in matrimony.

The man who desires an adoring slave for a wife should choose a spinster for a wife. She may have refused any number of good chances in her youth, but as she sees age coming on, and a lonely life staring her in the face, and realizes that her last call to the dining car has sounded, she is filled with undying gratitude to the man who has sense enough still to recognize her charms and marry her.

She is the true husband spoiler, and for the man with "ways" who likes to be coddled and fussed over; for the lazy man who wants to be waited upon hand and foot; for the egotist who aspires to playing Sir Oracle in his home, and who asks nothing better of life than a wife, who will burn incense at his feet, there is no choice equal to that of a woman of what is diplomatically called a "certain age."

With all of these tips staring him in the face—and every woman wearin ga tag around her neck so that he who runs may read to what class intellectually and sympathetically she belongs—it looks as if no man should have any difficulty in picking out a wife with whom life would be a grand sweet song, unmarred by discord. But he does, and the way the world plays at matrimonial cross purposes would be funny, if it were not so pathetic.

Congeniality of taste is the secret of domestic bliss, for one must have something on which to found an enduring friendship after the fire of passion has burned itself out, yet, few men ever consider this until they wake up to find themselves out of love, and into a life sentence of companionship with an incompatible temper.

Never was there a more untenable theory than the one about the attraction of opposites. Hence, when a man picks out a girl for a wife who has the same taste in cooking and musical comedy, he may approach the altar without a tremor of fear, for he has picked the right one for himself. She's in his class.

TRUCKS ON THE DESERT.

Four thousand picturesque camels and their 1000 drivers are to be succeeded by 30 businesslike American trucks for the transportation of freight between Tientsin, China, and Kulja, Eastern Turkestan, a distance of approximately 2000 miles.

An agricultural colonization company is responsible for the contemplated change. Farm products will be carried on the return trip. Each camel of the caravan now traveling the route is capable of carrying only 200 pounds of freight, while each truck equipped with a trailer, will be able to transport six tons.

Traveling at the rate of about 20 miles a day, the animals require about six months for the round trip. Trucks are expected to cover the distance in 30 days.—[Popular Mechanics.

LETTERS TO "THE TIMES."

Watch the Foreigner.

TULARE, Jan. 21.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In a late issue of your paper I noticed an article written by a woman, upholding the cause of the Japanese in California, and declaring that we should not close our doors to them. That was not her exact words, but they were to that effect. Let me say that I am astonished that any real American can for a moment, close his eyes to this great danger which we are bringing upon ourselves by permitting the Japanese people to gain so strong a foothold in our beloved country.

By permitting them to buy our lands, which should belong to our children in future years, we are wronging our coming generations and robbing our American boys and girls of their rights.

I say it is time for America to awaken, before it is too late. This evil can be remedied now, but let it go on for ten years, yet even five years, and we will have another bloody war. Let me just ask any sane person why our best lands should fall into the hands of foreign people, when we know these people have no love for our country, except for their own selfish interests.

Around here the Armenians and Japanese are getting possession of our ranches at such a rate that it is becoming not only serious but alarming to anyone who has the interest of our country at heart.

The Armenians own thousands of acres of vineyards, and they employ Japanese labor in preference to American labor every time, if possible, even though there are many strong American boys in the neighborhood who would be willing and glad to pick the grapes and do it quickly and well. They say the Japs work faster. Granting that they do, do these people who come here and get rich off of American soil and live under the protection of our laws owe allegiance to America or Japan? Let America awaken, not only to the Japanese question, but in regard to the other foreign residents as well.

Another Solution.

PASADENA, Jan. 21.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Elevated sidewalks built over the present ones in the downtown sections of Los Angeles would help to greatly reduce the present traffic congestion. It would also help to increase the sales of the second-floor departments and shops.

These walks could be built of concrete and extend from the second story of the buildings, the same width of the lower walk, and have a medium high protecting rail along the side. Glass plates could be placed in them to give light to the windows below.

If such walks could be built along both sides of Broadway and west on Seventh street, and along Sixth street to the Pacific Electric Depot on Main street, they would be used by almost every person coming into the city on the suburban trains, as well as those leaving on the trains. Those coming to work in the morning would be able to get to their offices or stores with no delay whatever—which would be a big saving in time and patience. The elimination of the greater part of the foot travel, would also cause less delay to the street cars and automobiles—and thereby reduce the number of serious accidents.

Most of the larger dry goods houses now have all their yardage goods, ready-to-wear, clothing and other departments on the second and third floors. And in order to reach these departments, a full block has to be wasted in walking from the store entrance back to the elevator and then forward again, usually to the front of the building—not mentioning the time spent at the elevator for an upward-bound car. And often after reaching the department desired, they are "just out" of what the shopper is wanting—so she has to retrace her steps to the street once more—making two blocks of distance walked and fifteen to twenty minutes in time spent—unnecessarily. A shopper sometimes has to go through this same agony at several different stores before finding what she wishes. If wasted time and energy count for anything—one can readily figure the saving an elevated sidewalk would be to the busy Los Angeles shopper.

The elevated sidewalk would create a demand for the second-floor storerooms. And it would give the business district the same advantage as would another street—but without the dangerous traffic. Something should be done soon, and the elevated walk would be the best improvement to relieve congestion and at the same time save the lives of the public. The cost of such an improvement would not be compared to that of elevating the street car tracks.

MRS. LEE FREESE.

Pay Much, Get Little.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 21.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The city of Los Angeles is paying the highest tax rate of any city in the West, and has less to show for it. Take old San Francisco, which was practically destroyed by fire and earthquake a few years ago, with two-thirds of her taxable property entirely destroyed for a period of several years. In addition to this, the Mayor was indicted for grafting, the president of the City Council was also indicted for grafting; poor old Abraham Ruef was sent to prison for years for selling the city's rights of way for his personal benefit. The president of the city railway was indicted for buying and selling the City Council like so much merchandise. Even way down here, some financial promoters wished they had never heard of their father Abraham (Ruef.)

Notwithstanding San Francisco's loss by taxes in the great fire, notwithstanding certain city officials were trying to rob her on every side, today she is the best built and most imposing city in the Union for her size. Furthermore, she has a fine City Hall and City Auditorium, a fine City Jail, the most attractive Civic Center of any city in the West. Her tax rate is 3.08 per cent. upon a valuation of 40 per cent. of actual values.

What has Los Angeles got? She has a stinkpot for a City Jail that is a disgrace to any civilized community, for a City Hall an old pigeon roost that is falling to pieces day by day; she also has a tax rate of 3.42 per cent., the highest in the State, upon a valuation of about 70 per cent. of the actual value of property.

We have for Mayor and City Council men who are far above the average of those who have held these offices for years past, but they do not get down to the root of the evil, and do not suggest any remedies for relief.

Do you believe for a minute that if either of these city officials owned this city, they would run it as it is being run now? Not on your life! They would have a housecleaning in the City Hall that would awake the nation and would curtail present expenditures so that you would soon be wondering what to do with the surplus. Why not work for the community, Mr. City Official, as though you were running your own private affairs? Until this is done, we, the public, cannot get any relief from high taxes.

It has been stated time and time again that if the people would vote for the water bonds and the power bonds, the revenue alone from this source would soon reduce the taxes to a mere bagatelle, but just now things are looking desperate for the poor taxpayer, when they are trying to make your taxes, 25 per cent. more than they are at this time.

The foundation of the city's revenue depends upon the prosperity of her realty values. Why not promote and encourage them after this long depression? Mr. Taxpayer, it is time for you to wake up!

Butchered the Play.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 21.—[To the Editor of The Times:] There is one thing that I admire about The Times and that is the publicity it gives to just criticisms of some of the "rotten" motion pictures that producers force on a confiding public.

I went to see "In Old Kentucky" recently. Twenty-five years, or more ago, Charley Dazey, a Quincy (Ill.) boy, gave to the people one of the most beautiful romances ever produced upon the stage. While I feared that the picture would be a disappointment to me, I did not anticipate seeing that beautiful play butchered as it is in this picture. I only want to speak of a few of the incidents that would make Charley Dazey turn over in his grave, if he knew that the producer took that beautiful and sterling little actress, Anita Stewart, and dressed her up like an organ grinder's money when she comes out of the stable to meet the man she loves. Why do they appeal to the "mob" for a laugh and disgust the thousands that have seen "In Old Kentucky" played in days gone by. She should have come in the "Sunday" dress that all mountain girls have. It would have appealed to the intelligent audience as pathetic instead of grossly humorous.

Again in the ballroom scene. That refined Kentucky lady, Aunt Aletha, would have found a dress something in unison with the garments worn by the other ladies; then "Ye Gods," to steal Bill Hart's turkey-in-the-straw dance and force Miss Stewart to burlesque the whole beautiful story.

Why do directors, in order to get a thrill, introduce things that are not only improbable, but impossible. If your newspaper writers would only criticise some of the pictures as they deserve, directors would take notice and try to meet the intelligent public with pictures worth while. But instead, they boost all alike, the bad with the good. If it had been left to the audience that saw the picture when I did, 90 per cent. would say I am right.

Another View.

SAN BERNARDINO, Jan. 18.—[To the Editor of The Times:] If the gentleman who so severely criticized "Doug" in your valuable paper this morning would reverse his opinion in comparing Douglas Fairbanks and Charles Chaplin, I believe he would come nearer voicing the opinion of "lay observers." Perhaps the satire and old time superstition is a little hard to swallow.

If more people wore the so-called "silly grin" and followed the "laugh and live" idea instead of the sour pessimistic expressions this old world would be a better place in which to live.

The word discussed could be more appropriately applied to some Chaplin pictures. If Mr. Chaplin would put his big shoes and trousers in the attic, for a while at least, and follow a little more closely the clever likable pictures of "Doug" his wonderful abilities as a comedian would be more appreciated by a great majority.

At any rate, I take my hat off to you, Mr. Fairbanks (although not in a woman's custom) continue to jump and climb, and don't forget the "silly grin."

Most big boys as well as the little ones are your ardent admirers to say nothing of the lady folks.

A Bit of History.

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 17.—[To the Editor of The Times:] An article published in The Los Angeles Times on January 17, 1920, copied from Leslies Weekly stated that Dr. Wood landed at Fort Hauchaca, Ariz., in 1895. I have every reason to believe that Dr. Wood and Dr. Skinner were in charge of the field hospital at Willcox, Ariz., August, 1881, during Geroninio's raid at that time. I had to leave my company while we were hot on the trail, on account of my eyes. Arriving at Willcox I was ordered by the commanding officer to report to Drs. Wood and Skinner for examination. During the examination a sergeant came by order of the commanding officer to ask if Pvt. Anton Mazzanovitch was fit for scouting duty. Dr. Wood said:

"Tell the commanding officer that Pvt. Anton Mazzanovich is not fit for scoutng duty or any other kind of duty, with my compliments."

I was under Wood's care until transferred to the hospital at my home post, Fort Grant, Ariz. I feel sure that my statement is correct unless there was another contract doctor by the name of Woods.

Too Much Business.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I sent in a four-line advertisement for your Sunday issue offering a furnished house for rent. Before 7 o'clock Sunday morning telephone calls had been answered by members of the family. I hastily dressed and continued answering calls until noon when we had answered over sixty calls. A correct tally was kept for each person answering the ad and by the time evening had arrived 126 answers had been received over the phone. I had to go to bed with a nervous headache and was quite sick Monday. I was in bed until 4 o'clock in the afternoon and the callers were still calling. I wish you would do something to head them off as the house was rented early Sunday. I will know better next time not to advertise in The Times. There are too many ad readers. I felt sorry for the telephone operator. But I do wish I had a hundred more houses to rent to accommodate families out here better than to have them turned out doors.

A PREHISTORIC WALL.

In exploring a mound in Licking county recently there was uncovered a stone wall. It was three feet high and enclosed an area of sixteen feet square. The wall was made of blocks of flint laid upon each other without cement of any kind, and was pretty well constructed.

This is, we believe, the second piece of prehistoric masonry discovered in this country. In another mound was found a bit of paving—a number of flat stones having been laid to form a sort of floor or hearth. This wall and the small area of stone pavement is all the masonry the Mound Builders or Indians ever did, so far as present discoveries indicate. And this in a country where loose rocks were to be found in abundance, or where the labor of quarrying them was slight; indeed, flat rocks may be had in many regions on top of the earth without quarrying at all.—[Columbus Dispatch.

More Iron Farm Hands.

Recently this column published a report that there were 6032 farm tractors in Missouri. This week's Missouri Clip Sheet, however, says that Saturday last there were 7200, with the number jumping every day. Twenty-seven hundred of the tractors had been sold since June 1 of this year which indicates how rapidly our farmers are getting lazy. An interesting fact is that the tractors have gone to every county in the State except Carter, Douglas, Shannon and Taney, as many as six apiece having gone to counties in which the uninformed imagine even horsepower can be little used and mule or goat power must be relied on. It is true there are spots in the Ozarks where the farmers have to wear telephone lineman's spikes while tending their crops, but even in Carter and Shannon counties there are valleys as level as floors and as fertile as Harold Bell Wright's imagination.—[Kansas City Times.

Q.: What has the war cost France in money and human material? H. D.

A.: The war has cost France about 2,000,000 men and over $30,000,000,000.

Q.: What is the Gila monster and where does it get its name? F. V.

A.: The Gila monster is a large lizard which is clumsy and most repulsive in appearance. It is so called from the Gila River in Arizona, and is the only member of its family which is venomous.

Q.: What is meant by triplex glass and in what way was it of service in the war? H. F. D.

A.: Triplex glass is made up of three layers of material, two of glass and the middle layer of zylonite. The middle layer makes the glass no less transparent, but keeps it from breaking. A severe blow produces fissures in the glass but the flexible material holds it all together. It proved to be of great service during the war for goggles for airmen. It is slightly thicker than other glass and of an amber tint.

Q.: How many buildings were destroyed in France and in the entire devastated sections during the war? I. L.

A.: Approximately 250,000 edifices in all were more or less seriously damages. In France 50,754 were completely destroyed and 52,048 partly destroyed. This does not include buildings which had merely broken window panes and shell scratches on the walls.

Q.: Can you give me the total number of battles fought by American troops and the total number of days of battles? G. D.

Perhaps your teeth are clouded by a film. Most teeth are, more or less, save right after cleaning in a dentist's chair.

The cloudy film looks like the teeth, and you think the teeth are clouded. But it is the film. Remove it and see how teeth look then.

That viscous film which you feel with your tongue is the cause of most tooth troubles. It clings to teeth, enters crevices and stays. The tooth brush does not end it. The ordinary dentifrice does not dissolve it. So it stays—much of it—and may do a ceaseless damage.

That is why so many brushed teeth discolor and decay. You leave the film, and that is the great tooth wrecker. Despite the tooth brush, statistics show that tooth troubles are constantly increasing.

How Teeth Are Ruined

That film is what discolors—not the teeth. It is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Millions of germs breed in it. Dentists call the film "bacterial plaque." Those germs, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Dental science has for years sought a way to combat this film. Periodic dental cleaning removed the film and tartar. But what was needed was a daily film combatant.

It has now been found. Convincing clinical and laboratory tests have amply proved its efficiency. Able [illegible] endorse it. And now leading [illegible] over America are urging its [illegible]

APPENDICITIS

Appendicitis is caused by the poisons from decaying food in the bowels. Many people have a bowel movement every day, but it is not a COMPLETE movement and much old, stale matter stays in the system to ferment and cause trouble. Often there is only a small passage in the center of bowels, while the sides are covered with old, hard matter which stays in the system. Besides appendicitis, such unclean bowels cause influenza, fevers, headaches and stomach trouble. Old, hard waste matter sticking to the sides of the bowels often poisons the system for months, making you feel tired all the time and "half-sick."

Don't allow this old, fermenting, filthy stuff to stay in your bowels for weeks, but GET IT OUT and keep it out. Even if your bowels move slightly each day, that is not enough. There must be an occasional THOROUGH, complete cleansing to rid your system of all accumulated decaying waste matter.

COMPLETE SYSTEM CLEANSER.

The most COMPLETE system cleanser known is a mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine and ten other ingredients, put up in ready prepared form under the name of Adler-i-ka. This mixture is so thorough a bowel cleanser that it removes foul and poisonous matter which other cathartic or laxative mixtures are unable to dislodge. It loosens and dissolves all foul matter sticking to the sides of the intestines, working without the least discomfort or trouble. It is so gentle that one forgets he has taken it until the THOROUGH evacuation starts. It is astonishing the great amount of foul, poisonous matter ONE SPOONFUL of Adler-i-ka draws from the alimentary canal—matter you would never have thought was in your system. Try it right after a natural bowel movement and notice how much MORE foul matter will be brought out which was poisoning your system. In slight disorders such as occasional constipation, sour stomach, "gas on the stomach" or sick headache, one spoonful always brings relief. Adler-i-ka is a constant surprise to people who have used only ordinary bowel and stomach medicines and the various oils and waters.

REPORTS FROM PHYSICIANS.

Dr. W. A. Line, West Baden, Ind.: "I use Adler-i-ka in my practice and have found nothing to excel it."

Dr. F. M. Prettyman, Mallard, Minn.: "I use Adler-i-ka in all bowel cases and have been very successful with it. Some cases require only one dose."

Dr. James Weaver, Loa, Utah: "I have found nothing in my 50 years practice to excel Adler-i-ka."

Druggist D. Hawks, Goshen, Ind.: "One of our leading doctors has used Adler-i-ka in cases of stomach trouble, with wonderful success. He has not lost a patient and saved many operations."

J. E. Puckett, Gillham, Ark.: "I had had stomach trouble. After taking Adler-i-ka feel better than for 20 years. Haven't language to express the AWFUL IMPURITIES which were eliminated from my system."

Cora E. Noblett, Sageeyah, Okla.: "Thanks to Adler-i-ka I can sleep all night now, something I could not do for years."

Mrs. L. A. Austin, Ausland, Minn.: "I could not eat a thing, my stomach was so weak. Adler-i-ka made me feel better and am now able to work and gaining."

Adler-i-ka is sold by leading druggists in each city. In Los Angeles by The Dickinson Drug Co., corner Third and Main. —[Advertisement.

WOMEN'S WORK, WOMEN'S CLUBS.

BY LADY JANE.

Hugh Walpole, the distinguished and popular English novelist, author of many books which are widely read in this country, will be the speaker at the Ebell Club tomorrow afternoon, and on next Friday Mr. Walpole will present the programme at the Friday Morning Club, for members only. Mr. Walpole's address at the Ebell Club will be on "Modern Novelists," and at the Friday Morning Club he will talk of "Creating a Novel." The drama department of the Ebell Club met Thursday, and presented an elaborate programme, which included an address on "The Religious Drama" by Mrs. W. S. Bartlett, and a representation of the dance in religion given by Miss Martha Graham and Miss Nina Byron of the Denishawn School of Dancing. Mrs. G. W. Hiett gave a reading of "Judith," by Arnold Bennett. Luncheon followed the programme.

Friday Morning Club.

The Literature Committee, under the direction of Mrs. Sarah M. Johnson, seated 200 guests at luncheon last Tuesday, for the most successful meeting of that department this season. "Servants of Reality" was the subject. Next Tuesday the Drama Committee, under the direction of Dr. Dorothea Moore, will meet at luncheon at noon for an interpretation of modern French and Italian plays. At the meeting, Friday, Hugh Walpole, English novelist, will be the speaker.

Women's City Club.

The programme to be given by the Women's City Club, tomorrow afternoon, in Lincoln Hall, Walker's Auditorium, will be an address on "Home Making, Instead of Housekeeping," by Claire Hasler Coombs. The Americanization section will meet following the programme.

Wednesday Morning Club.

Next Wednesday the Wednesday Morning Club will celebrate its twenty-second birthday with a programme by Lillian Burkhart Goldsmith on "Reasons for Rhyme and Prose," after which a reception will be given the new members, interspersed with music by Mrs. L. Paul Zahn. The luncheon hostess, is Mrs. C. B. Rhodes.

Last Wednesday, Prudence Penny told the members to take the "Work Out of Housework, by System and Modern Methods," meaning electricity. Mrs. James A. Neal, accompanied by Mrs. E. B. Mills, sang "My Rosary" and "The Year's at the Spring."

Tomorrow the Broadway Board of Trade and the club will give a dance in Odd Fellows Hall, North Broadway and Workman streets, for the purpose of purchasing a piano for the Lincoln Heights branch of the Public Library.

Mrs. Charles A. Holland, president, asked the opinion of the members in regard to a boycott on potatoes, the idea met with instant approval and was voted unanimously.

Mrs. E. M. Grant, the club's 80-year-old member held a reception Saturday, her birthday.

City Teachers.

A tea was given by the City Teachers' Club, January 15, which was attended by sixty members. The programme included a group of songs sung by Marian Bemis; a gavotte danced by Margaret Gillimore, pupil of Prof. Rossi, and reading by Elsie Bartlett, from a new book by Thurston. Hostesses were Mary Allen and Georgine Amas from the Twentieth-street school, and Carrie Rathenberger and Lora Clark from the Belvedere school.

Highland Park Ebell Club.

Raymond Dunlap, chief attendance officer of the city schools, gave an address before the Highland Park Ebell Club, Tuesday. "Problems and Pleasures in Child Welfare Work," was the topic. E. W. Mecum, county probation officer, spoke on "Boy and Girl Problems." Next Tuesday morning May Gearhart, supervisor of art in the public schools, will speak for the club.

Federation of Women's Clubs.

Senator J. M. Inman, president of the California Oriental Exclusion League, will address a general meeting of club women, affiliated with the California Federation of Women's Clubs upon the Japanese immigration question as it affects Californians at 2 p.m. Saturday, February 7, at the Friday Morning Club House.

Hollywood Women's Club.

Members of the Women's Club of Hollywood are rejoiced over the prospect of an art association, which will eventually become affiliated with an art museum. The idea was conceived and put before the club by Miss Virginia Graeff at the meeting, Wednesday. The suggestion was met with immediate response and ninety-five memberships of $1 each were taken. A meeting for the purpose of this organization will be held after the regular club meeting, next Wednesday. The speaker on that day will be Paul Leysac, who will read from French literature. At the drama section luncheon on that same day, Mrs. Cora B. Fithian will give a brief review of the life of Bernard Shaw. Other readings will be given by Mrs. A. L. Bartlett, Mrs. Francis A. B. Blackburn and J. R. Carter.

Pasadena Improvement.

Husbands, fathers and friends of the members of the Woman's Improvement Association of South Pasadena will be entertained with a dinner-dance, Thursday evening. This annual event is in charge of the Ways and Means Committee.

City Teachers' Club.

Members of the Membership Committee of the Los Angeles City Teachers' Club, comprising one representative from each of the 170 elementary schools of the city, are looking forward with much interest to the bi-monthly meeting at the club rooms, Trinity Auditorium Building, tomorrow at 4 p.m., when Dr. Jessie Russell, chairman of the legislative section of the Tuesday Afternoon Club of Glendale, will address them on "Community Property Law."

Daughters American Revolution.

The regular monthly reciprocity luncheon of the Southern California Daughters of the American Revolution was held at the City Club, Tuesday afternoon, the speaker being Capt. John D. Fredericks, who spoke on the economic situation now existing in the United States. Following the luncheon, the State Regent, Mrs. C. C. Cottle, met the members of the State Council, and plans for the State conference to be held February 12 and 13, at the Ebell Club House, were perfected. Mrs. Lyman B. Stookey, in charge of the Programme Committee, reported the programme as about ready to go to press, and promised good music and speakers; Mrs. Earl J. Fellows will be chairman of the Hospitality Committee; Decorations, Mrs. Ella Van Court; Ushers, Mrs. Eunice J. Eastman; Printing and Badges, Mrs. Wilbur E. Labry; Credentials, Mrs. E. B. Thompson; Resolutions, Mrs. W. A. D'Egilbert, of Oakland, and in charge of the Luncheons, Mrs. M. M. Maybury.

California's portion of the $100,000 bond purchased by the national society, and the money promised for the Tilloloy fund has been all pledged, as well as $100 voted to help furnish the banquet room of Continental Hall and a chair for the museum in the same building. These facts, Mrs. Cottle, the State Regent, will report to the congress in April.

At the suggestion of Mrs. James Henry Ballagh, the council is planning to furnish a room at the Museum of History, Science and Arts, at Exposition Park, with Revolutionary relics from the homes of Southern California Daughters.

Mrs. O. H. Harshbarger is candidate for State Regent, and Mrs. Lyman B. Stookey for Vice-Regent of California, and Mrs. C. C. Cottle, the present State Regent, will be indorsed for Vice-President-General at the conference next month. The most important business to come before the conference will be the revision of the State constitution and by-laws.

Business Women's Civic Club.

A lecture by Dr. C. S. Winbigler at the last meeting of the Business Women's Civic Club, on "Mind and Suggestion in Relation to Success" proved an alluring title, judging from the full attendance. The presentation of the subject included the influence of the mind on health and happiness, the value of suggestion and of the elimination of unfriendly mental attitudes toward others, thus making success largely a matter of self determination.

On their recreation evening, tomorrow, the membership of the club will be the invited guests of the Blue Triangle Club, second floor of the Brack-Shops.

Women's Press Club.

An unusually interesting programme will be presented at the meeting of the Women's Press Club, Tuesday afternoon, at the Brack-Shops. Mrs. Georgina S. Townsend, vice-president, will preside in the absence of Mrs. Mary Clough Watson, the president. Mrs. Alice Harriman, leader of the fiction section, will announce the results of a story contest, which will appear in the valentine number of The Times Magazine, and also the acceptance of other stories written by members of the club. Mrs. Bertha Lincoln Heustis, chairman of the programme, will introduce Marian Ryan of London, Eng., who is photographing and writing up Southern California for London papers, and who will speak of the newspaper work done by women in England. An hour of song and story will follow, presented by Miss Jessie Weimar, reader. Miss Ruth Miller, soprano, will sing a manuscript song by Mrs. Sarah MacLean Kerrigan, a member of the club. Miss Louie Davison, will play a violin solo composed by Julius V. Seyler, who will accompany upon the piano. Mrs. McQuinn and Mrs. Gough will be hostesses at the social tea following, at which Mrs. Emma Seckle Marshall, and Mrs. Susan M. Sweet, past presidents of the club, will preside.

University Club.

Hugh Walpole, the English novelist, will address the Women's University Club, next Saturday, at 2:30 p.m. at the Ebell Club House, on Russian Vignettes.

The club will sell the 300 seats not to be used by the club members.

A tea will be given the eminent author after the lecture, at which Miss Lillian Van Dyke, Mrs. David Spangler, Mrs. Claire Murphy and Mrs. Burton will preside at the tea tables.

Parent-Teacher Association.

"Home Economics" will be one of the subjects to be discussed at the conference to be held by the First District California Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers in the auditorium of the Broadway Department Store, beginning at 10 a.m., Thursday. Grace E. Dutton will have charge of the round table. The department of legislation, of which Mrs. W. W. Wilson is chairman, will discuss the community property law. L. H. Roseberry and Mabel Willebrandt are the speakers, pro and con. For the publicity department Robert H. Poole of the California Theater will give an address. Mrs. C. S. Thompson will preside.

Rode a Torpedo.

Probably the only man who ever rode a navel torpedo under way is Nelson H. Blout, a Yale graduate, now at the Newport torpedo station. Some time ago when Mr. Blout was experimenting at New London, he wanted to go with the torpedo, so he rigged a saddle and two small pontoons on the sides, and taking his seat, had the missile fired from the surface and started on his daring ride. When the torpedo spent itself the inventor was still on top.—Indianapolis News.

Minister Wanted.

Willie had swallowed a penny and his mother was in a state of alarm. "Helen," she called to her sister, in the next room, "send for a doctor; Willie has swallowed a penny!" The terrified and frightened boy looked up imploringly. "No, mamma," he interposed, "send for the minister." "The minister?" asked his mother, incredulously. "Why the minister?" "Because papa says he can get money out of anybody."—[Buffalo Commercial.

THE D.A.R.

Their Relations to the Industrial Problems of Today.

BY MYRA NYE.

This organization of women is living down, in Los Angeles, its old stigma. "Daughters of the Annual Rumpus," once its by-cognomen, is here a misnomer. Nothing more than the ordinary ripples have disturbed the steady progress of their work in this city. The stormy petrel is not their insignia. Their medium of action is not the high fracas when distraught phrases and dizzy sentences lead to vituperation, even if it has been occasionally so in the East.

Americanization, the key word of study and endeavor for all organizations of both men and women, is the very raison d'etre of the D.A.R. The work along that line, begun six years ago at the Albion School and since co-operated in by them, makes them the pioneers. The Eye Specialist and Medical Author Report on Wonderful Remedy To Strengthen Eyesight

Say It Strengthens Eyesight 50% in One Week's Time in Many Instances

New York.—Dr. Smith, a well known eye specialist, and Dr. Judkins, a Massachusetts physician and medical author, make the following reports after a thorough test of a popular remedy for the eyes:

Says Dr. Smith: "When my attention was first called to it I was inclined to be skeptical. But it is a rule of mine to give every new treatment a chance to prove its value. Having specialized in eye work for many years I feel qualified to express an intelligent opinion on remedies for the eyes. Since this one has created such a sensation I welcomed the opportunity to test it. I began to use it in my practice a little over a year ago and I am frank to say that some of the results I have accomplished with Bon-Opto not only astonish myself, but also other physicians with whom I have talked about it, and I advise every thoughtful physician to give Bon-Opto the same careful trial I have and there is no doubt in my mind that he will come to the conclusion I have, that it opens the door for the cure of many eye troubles which have heretofore been difficult to cope with. I have had individuals who had worn glasses for years tell me they have dispensed with them through the use of Bon-Opto. In my own practice I have seen it strengthen the eyesight more than 50 per cent. in one week's time. I have also used it with surprising results in cases of work-strained eyes, pink eye, inflamed lids, catarrhal conjunctivitis, smarting, painful, aching, itching eyes, eyes weakened from colds, smoke, sun, dust and wind, watery eyes, blurred vision, and, in fact, many other conditions too numerous to mention in this report. A new and striking case that has just been brought to my attention is that of a girl 12 years old. Two prominent eye specialists, after a thorough examination, decided, according to her father, that in order to save the sight of her right eye, the left must be removed. While awaiting an opportunity for the operation and still undecided as to its wisdom, her father was told it would do no harm to use Bon-Opto. In less than three days a marked improvement was noticed. At the end of a week the inflammation had almost disappeared, and at the end of six weeks the eye was pronounced saved. Just think what the saving of that eye means to this little girl! Another case is that of a lady 93 years old. She came to me with dull vision and extreme inflammation of the lids and the conjunctiva was almost raw. After two weeks' use of Bon-Opto the lids were absolutely normal and her eyes are as bright as many a girl of 16."

Dr. Judkins, Massachusetts physician and medical author, formerly chief of clinics in the Union General Hospital, Boston, Mass., and formerly house surgeon at the New England Eye and Ear Infirmary of Portland, Maine, says:

"I have found oculists too prone to operate and opticians too willing to prescribe glasses, while neglecting the simple formulas which form the basis of Bon-Opto, which in my opinion, is a remarkable remedy for the cure and prevention of many eye disorders. Its success in developing and strengthening the eyesight will soon make eye-glasses old-fashioned and the use of Bon-Opto as common as that of the tooth brush. I am thoroughly convinced from my experience with Bon-Opto that it will strengthen the eyesight at least 50 per cent. in one week's time in many instances."

Victims of eye strain and other eye weaknesses and many who wear glasses will be glad to know that according to Drs. Smith and Judkins there is real hope and help for them. Many whose eyes were failing say they have had their eyes restored by this remarkable remedy and many who once wore glasses say they have laid them aside. One man says after using it:

"I was almost blind. Could not see to read at all. Now I can read everything without any glasses and my eyes do not hurt any more. At night they would pain dreadfully. Now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me." A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy with or without glasses, but after using this prescription for 15 days everything seems clear. I can read even fine print without glasses." Another who used it says: "I was bothered with eyestrain, caused by overworked, tired eyes which induced fierce headaches. I have worn glasses for several years, both for distance and close work, and without them I could not read my own name on an envelope or the typewriting on the machine before me. I can do both now and have discarded my long-distance glasses altogether. I can count the fluttering leaves on the trees across the street now, which for several years have looked like a dim green blur to me. I cannot express my joy at what it has done for me."

It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited in this easy manner. Go to any drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets. Dissolve one tablet in a fourth of a glass of water and use from two to four times a day. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation and redness will quickly disappear. If your eyes bother you even a little, it is your duty to take steps to save them now before it is too late. Many hopelessly blind might have saved their sight if they had cared for their eyes in time.

NOTE: Another prominent physician to whom the above article was submitted, said: "Yes, the Bon-Opto prescription is truly a wonderful eye remedy. Its constituent ingredients are well known to eminent eye specialists and widely prescribed by them. I have used it very successfully in my own practice on patients whose eyes were strained through overwork or misfit glasses. It is one of the very few preparations I feel should be kept on hand for regular use in almost every family." Bon-Opto referred to above, is not a patent medicine or a secret remedy. It is an ethical preparation, the formula being printed on the package. The manufacturers guarantee it to strengthen eyesight 50 per cent. in one week's time in many instances or refund the money. It is dispensed under guaranty by all good druggists in this city.—[Advertisement.

The D.A.R.

women of the Los Angeles chapter, the Eschscholtzia, by far the largest in the State; the Cabrillo, the General Fremont and Tierra Alta chapters are all doing definite work along this line in Los Angeles, while the surrounding towns are supporting night schools for the foreigners in their midst, trying in various ways to Americanize without patronizing the foreigner.

Mrs. Cassius Cottle, the State Regent, has just started the work of making a fine colonial exhibit with real historic value at Exposition Park. Mrs. Lyman B. Stookey is chairman of the committee and all the chapters of Southern California will share in the effort. Mrs. Stookey is at present most busy as State chairman of the arrangements for the State conference to be held February 12-14 at the Ebell Club House, when a large number of northern women will be present. The predominating theme of the conference will be patriotism in peace and Americanization as exemplified by the pre-eminent American, Abraham Lincoln, whose birthday is celebrated the first day of the conference.

Mrs. James W. Johnson of Los Angeles, State chairman of International Relations, is now securing data from all the chapters of the State concerning the League of Nations. She says that more than 95 per cent. of the Daughters of the Revolution in California have definitely stated they favor the League either with or without reservations. Every chapter in the State has pledged to send a letter to their Senator, urging the ratification of the League. At the last annual national conference, or congress, as the women call it, in Washington, California held the best record in this line of work, the big Eschscholtzia of Los Angeles and the little chapter of Covina being mentioned as doing the best work and study in international relations of all the chapters in the United States.

Perhaps it is their colonial balls, their social functions of eclat and prestige that have given the D.A.R. an artificial coloring in the eyes of the public who have come to think they can only play and know no work. Hence, too, may have come their repute for snobbishness. But they have no more need of snobbishness than Venus de Milo has need of a hobbled skirt and leg-o-mutton sleeves. If snobbishness was, before the war, their habitual garb, they are fast reclothing themselves. They claim no glory to themselves. Indeed, they say at their meetings in ritual, "It is indeed a desirable thing to be well descended, but the glory belongs to our ancestors. We can share in that glory only by serving the country they established and the safety of a country lies in the intelligence, moral character and patriotism of her citizens."

When 300 D.A.R. chapter members from Southern California met last Tuesday at luncheon in the Men's City Club they were paid a quietly sincere compliment by Capt. John D. Fredericks, who spoke to them on the subject, "Industrial Problems of Today."

"Being who you are and what you are, you know the grave problems of the world today and of the United States better than most groups of organized women. As a direct descendant of the first chaplain of the first Continental Congress, I do not speak as an outsider, but as one of you, an American from the first. And further, I am not going to talk to you on this subject as women, but as I would talk to men.

"Women who have in their blood the virility of the colonial pioneers and those long-ago immigrants—for such your forefathers were—are not going to look down in contempt upon the immigrants of today. Yet many of these latter have a great misconception," Capt. Fredericks said, "of the word liberty and its American meaning, the word around which our very constitution was written. They are apt to forget that liberty is bounded by the rights of our fellows, that the only true liberty is under law. With their fallacious views as to liberty they have created conditions that today menace liberty itself. You women organized for the purpose you are to preserve true patriotism and liberty have now reached the place where you must know this problem and have a hand in it and see to it that no class shall dominate another as the labor unionized class is now dominating over the people.

"Our traditions are such," he went on to say, "that we will not live under an absolute monarchy no matter how beneficent. We would not accept the dictates of corporations and trusts so corporations have been dissolved by the government. The eggs actually have been unscrambled. No more now will we accept the dictation of the labor unions than then we accepted the dictation of trusts.

"What good is beef if it cannot be cooked? Just last week our government served an injunction against the beef trust. But the coal trust went unchallenged. Beef cannot be cooked without coal. Five hundred thousand coal miners, if they had achieved their goal,—and they came very near it—would have had in their possession the power to determine, not only whether we should cook our meat, but whether we should travel at all, whether the thousands of boilers that control manufacturies should run; they would have had in their hands the power over life itself for many in the United States. Even if they had all the wisdom of the wisest 500,000 men in the world we would not be willing to turn over to them such power. But they have not. This anti-beef injunction and pro-coal strike is a strangely inconsistent anomaly in our government." And Capt. Fredericks assured these women of the D.A.R., who were so intelligently listening to him, that it was their duty to help make simple these complex inconsistencies.

"When the labor unions adopt the idea best work for best wage, instead of best wage for least work in minimum time and the further idea that everything attained by service belongs to the man who serves and continues to serve and work to maintain that thing, then and not till then will high prices go down. Then the 10,000,000 of the unions will not dictate to the 100,000,000 of the people of the country."

To this end Capt. Fredericks warned the women against admitting to their platforms the unpatriotic men and women of nauseous notions concerning liberty and anarchy which recently, he said, had been the proclivity of women's clubs in Los Angeles. When I asked him later if he referred to the open forum of the Woman's City Club, he said:

"I mean all of them that tolerate such speakers, from the Friday Morning Club down or up, whichever way it is."

AUTO INDUSTRY WAXING STRONG

Increased Production Seen in Better Steel Situation.

Ford Plans to Turn Out One Million Cars this Year.

Secrecy Surrounds Output of Lincoln Motor Company.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

DETROIT (Mich.) Jan. 22.—Improvement in the steel situation is one of the encouraging signs of the march toward increased production in the automobile industry. In this connection comes the announcement of Henry Ford that he will place orders for $15,000,000 worth of steel with the U. S. Steel Corporation. Mr. Ford's announcement refutes a widespread impression that his company and the steel corporation were at loggerheads, and gives ample evidence that he believes the automobile industry is due for an indefinite period of prosperity.

ONE MILLION FORDS.

Mr. Ford stated that his plants will turn out 1,000,000 automobiles and trucks and 150,000 tractors this year.

The secrecy that has surrounded the plans of the Lincoln Motor Company, founded by Henry M. Leland and his son, Wilfred C. Leland, during the war for the manufacture of Liberty motors, was dispelled the past week when $8,000,000 of the company's stock was offered to the public and oversold in ninety minutes.

UNIQUE FEATURES.

This latest addition to the motor-car industry of Detroit is capitalized with 160,000 shares of "A" stock of $50 par value and 160,000 shares of "B" stock, of no par value. It was the "A" stock which embraces several unique features from the investor's standpoint that was offered to the public and taken over in record-breaking time.

This stock bears $5 a year dividends cumulative. It is callable at $100 a share. In addition, after the payment of $5 a share in "B" stock it will share equally with that stock in further dividends on the "B" stock. It has qualified voting power and is preferred as to assets.

The Lelands own control of the company, through ownership of a majority of the B stock. Henry M. Leland is president of the company and Wilfred C. Leland is vice-president. William T. Nash is secretary and treasurer, and the directors are the officers and James Boyer, William H. Murphy, John Trix and John [illegible]

GUARD PLANS.

Details regarding the car the company will manufacture are still carefully guarded. It is known that the car has been ready for some time, but so well has it been kept from public knowledge that even the other motor car manufacturers are in the dark as regards the product.

Present plans call for the production of 6000 cars the first year and [illegible],000 the second. Estimated profits for the first year are $2,000,000. A dealers' organization has been ready for some time and awaits the introduction of the car to the public. M. J. Budlong, formerly president of the Packard New York company, and later with Gaston, Williams & Wigmore, will represent the company in New York.

These Were the Last Word in Motor Cars Not Many Years Ago—Compare Them with Models on the Row Today.

A slight idea of the tremendous advance in motor-car design can be obtained from these machines—models for the big eastern shows about a decade ago. The Ford at the top is one of the very first produced and is fitted up with all the modern conveniences of those days (note the door bell on the dash board.) The Buick was Hal Tuttle's pride about ten years ago, and he used to brag that the carburetor never had to be regulated unless you were going up to Altadena or some high point like that. The nifty lines on the Cadillac were a knockout about fifteen years ago.

SETS RECORD AS "TOURED" AREA.

Calls for Road Information Keep Big Force Busy.

Motorists from Northwest Show Steady Increase.

Southern California, comprising 70,399 square miles, was the most "toured" area in the world during the past year.

This fact was established yesterday by a report for 1919 from the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California, showing that 2,491,570 maps were used by local and visiting motorists in exploring the highways which the southern part of the State has donated to the public.

NOT HALF OF IT.

And that isn't the half of it. More than a quarter of a million calls for touring information were received by the club during the last twelve months, or exactly 299,799, according to the total of the organization's daily records.

That the year 1920 in touring activity here will exceed anything ever contemplated is predicated from the fact that the records show that the maelstrom of swirling automobiles in the southern counties during the past twelve months was more maelstromish than in the three years previous combined. Inquiries addressed to eastern points, which pride themselves on being toured to death, have failed to show anything approaching the map record of this corner of America.

MASS OF LETTERS.

From eastern motorists who were coming to Southern California the Auto Club received 10,841 letters asking for road conditions here, and the best route to take in journeying westward to the sea.

More than a call a minute on road information was received by the club for every day in the year of 1919. Of these, 116,255 were telephone and 172,623 were personal "drop ins." This territory was apparently touring mad.

One of the most interesting features of the year's development was the sudden blazing into the limelight of that highway leading to Southern California from Vancouver, B. C., known as the Pacific highway, which drains the immense territories of Wasnington, Oregon and Western Canada. Where only hundreds of motoring parties visited us via this route in previous years, thousands came in 1919, according to the Auto Club's daily checking system.

DOUBLE THE MARK.

In the year 1918 the club distributed to members, visitors and purchasers less than one million maps, but in 1919 this number was more than doubled, the two-million mark being exceeded by half. It is expected that 5,000,000 will be used here in 1920.

LARGEST SHARE TO THIS COUNTRY.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 22.—State Controller John S. Chambers today announced the semi-annual statement of apportionment of receipts of the motor vehicle department for the period from July 1, 1919 to January 1, 1920.

The amount distributed to the State and counties totals $248,496.92. Los Angeles county gets the largest share of any county in the State. Her cut is $35,692.74. San Francisco is next with a cut of $12,132.99. The apportionment is based on the motor vehicle license receipts collected in the counties.

RACE DRIVERS EN ROUTE HERE.

Working Day and Night on Cars for Opening Event.

Los Angeles Speedway Now Second to None.

Washington's Day Event to be Record Breaker.

With the passing of the Sheepshead Bay and Chicago speedways, due to the advance of industrial and metropolitan necessity, the magnitude of the Los Angeles speedway is even greater than at first realized. The abandonment of these two internationally famous speedways will mean that Los Angeles, because of climatic conditions as much as any other condition, will be the center of automobile racing. Aside from the annual Indianapolis race meet, it is more than likely that a majority of the larger race meets will be held at the new Beverly Hills speedway.

GIGANTIC SCOPE.

Some idea of the gigantic scope of this new project can be more readily recognized, from the fact that more than 200 acres of land are necessary as a site for the new automobile speedway, also that more than 4,000,000 feet of lumber is being used in the construction work. The entire cost of the "speed plant" will approximate $750,000.

Two immense grandstands, one at each side of the track, seating more than 30,000 people are well under construction and will be completed at an early date. To give some idea of the size of these stands, the seats if placed end to end would cover a distance of seven miles.

What probably will be more than welcome news to those who have attended former race meets in Los Angeles, is the anouncement that more than five miles of parking space has been provided in the infield. Six automobile tunnels running under the grandstand and track have been completed.

Automobiles will be so parked that the race can be seen at all times. This new parking system will be such that one can leave the track at any time and after the race there will be no waits or delays to get started homeward.

ALREADY HERE.

Many of the race drivers have already arrived in Los Angeles and are working day and night on their cars so as to have all in readiness for the opening race, February [illegible]. After a meeting of the directors and contractors on Saturday, it was definitely announced by Manager A. M. Young, that the track would be ready for practice on February 5. This news was received with much enthusiasm by the drivers, as they are all more than anxious to try out the new course. Some spectacular driving is assured from the fact that in order to stay on the track the cars must acquire a speed of from 80 to 85 miles per hour. This is made necessary by the construction of the board track which in places at the turns" reaches 'a 40 deg. angle.

OVERSIZE TIRE MILEAGE.

The custom of using oversize tires is becoming popular, and it may be well to remind car owners making this change that these larger sizes, one inch bigger in wheel diameter, and three inches in wheel circumference, make a difference in speedometer registration. The recording instrument will turn up fewer miles with the larger tires than with standard sizes. A thirty-inch tire will drop a mile in every thirty traveled, or, in other words, will record only twenty-nine miles instead of thirty actually traveled.

GREAT YEAR FOR SPEED.

De Palma Sets Many New Motor Car Records; Eddie Hearne Cops Title.

BY ROY H. COMPTON.

In 1911 the automobile racing world became wonderfully enthused when Ray Harroun piloted a car around the Indianapolis speedway for 500 miles at an average of 74.50 holes per hour. The feat was proclaimed incomparable; it represented the ultimate in sustained motor speed. Every newspaper and magazine in the country commented in some manner on the performance as typifying the arrival of the Age of Speed and it was predicted that the record could not be surpassed.

Mathematicians and scientists got out their pencils and pads and figured the dreadful things that would happen to a driver should he attempt to propel a car faster than Harroun had done. It was foretold that about everything imaginable would happen to him; his head would blow off or the wheels leave the car.

SOON SHATTERED.

But Harroun's mark stood only until the next Indianapolis race was run. Joe Dawson, undaunted by all the predictions of a direful fate should the former record be exceeded went right out and reeled off another 500 miles at such a speed that his average was 78.7 miles an hour. Joe's head was not blown off by tearing through the atmosphere nor did the wheels fly off the axles and a direful catastrophe result.

In 1913 the speed for 500 miles showed a slackening off from the Dawson figure and the mark stood until 1915 when De Palma drove the same distance at an average speed of 89.84 miles an hour. Resta the same year set a mark of 97.58 for 500 miles on the new board speedway at Chicago. However, he did not have as hard a course to pound over as hed De Palma. His average was eight miles an hour faster than De Palma's and remains today the fastest 500 miles ever covered by an automobile in competition.

The late John Aitken in 1916 drove 100 miles on the Indianapolis track at an average speed of 108.83 miles an hour, the fastest time for that distance ever made on the Hoosier oval.

The year 1919 was quite mediocre in its developments. There was nothing sensational accomplished in competition with the possible exception of the drive made by Howard Wilcox in the 500-mile event at Indianapolis when he averaged 87.95 miles an hour but did not equal the record. But in noncompetitive marks, the year was the most productive of remarkable records ever known.

The past year will stand out prominently in another way, also. It marked the end of competition for cars of 300 cubic inches piston displacement. Builders of special racing cars at last have become convinced of what drivers had been telling them, that the cars had been developed to the point where they were too fast to be driven at top speed over the tracks with safety. Now has come the announcement that hereafter the big national competitive tests will be for cars limited to 182 cubic inches piston displacement.

SPRINT RACING.

Sprint racing came into vogue during 1919 and it is probable that there will be more short-race programmes in the future than in the past. The public had become tired of waiting for several hours to know the winner of a contest. Cars could not be driven at top speed for such distances as 500 miles and this conservation resulted in a slowing up. The public would prefer always seeing drivers getting the most possible out of cars for shorter distances than reducing speed to make the cars hold up to the end. Motor racing has come to be looked upon as the acme of action and there is nothing more listless than checking off lap after lap at slow speed and hoping for the finish to come.

The one race at Indianapolis and those at Sheepshead Bay, Ascot Park, Uniontown, Tacoma and one at Cincinnati were the principal events of national interest during the year. Los Angeles had the credit of opening the year with the road race over the Santa Monica course, conducted under the auspices of the Motor Car Dealers' Association.

Another incident worth more than

ALLOWS QUICKER ENTRANCE OF NEW GAS AND EXPULSION OF EXPLODED MIXTURE.

The matter of valve area in proportion to the capacity of the motor cylinder has long been recognized by engineers as one of the determining factors in the efficiency of a motor. A large valve area was early found to give best results because it permitted quicker scavenging of the burnt gases and a quicker filling of the cylinder with fresh gas on the intake charge.

"To get this large valve area the builders of poppet-valve motors were forced to resort to dual-valve systems," declares W. B. Conditt, distributor for Southern California and Arizona for the R. and V. Knight six. "A single valve, large enough to obtain the desired result, was apt to warp under the intense heat of high-speed operation. The use of the doubled number of valves, however, gave a large number of added complications, and not a little power was absorbed in overcoming the resistance of the doubled number of valve springs.

"It is evident, however, that the designers of the Knight type motors have no such problems to contend with. Since the Knight valves are merely ports cut in the walls of cylinders and sleeves, it is obvious that any desired proportion between valve opening and cylinder content can be easily obtained by increasing or decreasing the size of the ports.

"As a result, the Knight motor in the six-cylinder R. and V. Knight has a valve efficiency fully as great as though twenty-four valves of the poppet type were employed, and, needless to say, the result is attained in a very simple fashion."

AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY IN GERMANY.

BY CAPT. GEORGE R. HILL.

Very little is known concerning the condition of the automobile industry in Germany, or to what extent the manufacturers there are preparing for export business in the near future. The general social unrest, labor troubles, shortage of coal and the necessary raw materials, all combine to make the situation a hard one to diagnose as regards present and future production.

There is, of course, a ban on all exportation, and so whatever is being produced for foreign trade at a later date is now being stored probably in the hope of an early lifting of the blockade. If our information is to be trusted, there are at several of the big factories many thousands of chassis completed and in process of construction, and the natural inference is that a very large percentage of these are for export.

The Mercedes at Stuttgart, Benz at Mannheim, Adler at Frankfort and Opel at Russelsheim are among the principal motor works in Germany, and the war, of course, expanded them to many times their original size. Their equipment of machine tools was tremendously augmented by the complete pillage of the Belgian factories, and so in this respect, at least, they are well prepared to take care of future business.

The chassis on hand at the factories already mentioned are, of course, without tires, as these can only be obtained at a prohibitive price in German money for the entire country has been without rubber for a long time, and the blockade on its importation since the war has made it a very scarce commodity.

Tire smuggling, however, is going on, and with the probable connivance of certain petty officials, truck loads of the precious article are getting through Alsace-Lorraine under the pretext that they are for the armies in occupied territory.

Interesting Trip Into Palm Canyon.

A Studebaker Big Six inclosed car, equipped all around with Goodrich cord tires, recently made the jaunt into the scenic spot back of Riverside, known as Palm Canyon. Some interesting history of the canyon was obtained from early settlers. Both the Studebaker and Goodrich cords behaved like thoroughbreds.

AUTO INDUSTRY WAXING WARM.

nounced following the annual meeting of the board of directors of the Buick Motor Company, at which H. H. Basset was elected president and general manager to succeed Walter P. Chrysler, resigned. Construction, it was stated, is already under way with a view to increasing the production to 750 finished automobiles a day at the earliest possible moment.

The programme includes nine new buildings and extensions to three others with new machinery and equipment.

An additional $3,000,000 will be expended in building an assembling plant for the Buick at St. Louis, Mo., where, in addition to assembling 200 cars a day, equipment will be installed for turning out 200 finished automobile bodies a day.

No important changes in the personnel of the Buick organization were announced.

HONOR CHRYSLER.

Friends and business associates of Walter P. Chrysler, to the number of 350, Thursday night did him honor at a testimonial dinner. K. Dallas Dort, president of the Dort Motor Company, presided as toastmaster. After the dinner toasts were given by W. W. Mountain, with whom Mr. Chrysler is to be associated in the Willys-Overland interests; C. S. Mott, a vice-president of the General Motors Corporation, and others.

Definite announcement that the Friend Motor Corporation, headed by Otis Friend of New York City, has taken over the Olympian Motors Company of Pontiac, was made Thursday by Mr. Friend.

The Friend Motors Corporation has assumed the obligations of the Olympian company to the extent of $250,000, takes over all the property and equipment and will continue to manufacture the Olympian car, with some changes.

The first year's schedule of production will be between 3500 and 4000 cars. Stockholders in the Olympian company will receive share for share of stock in the new concern, it is announced.

The debut of the real post-war automobile at the shows this year has added so much genuine interest to these events that the Detroit automobile show, to be staged February 14 to 21, promises to eclipse all previous exhibitions in the auto city.

Besides featuring the post-war automobile the trade is looking toward the Detroit show with keen expectations because it offers a combination of passenger cars, trucks, tractors and equipment.

The Republic Motor Truck Company, of Alma, expects to expend $200,000 on plant additions within the near future, with about double its capacity. Operating 100 per cent. the factory has been able to turn out only half the vehicles the sales department requires.

AUTOMOBILES IN GERMANY.

Certain dealers have customers for tires who seem to be purchasing steadily despite the enormous price which they bring when paid for in the greatly depreciated mark, and some of these dealers, most of whom make Cologne their headquarters, have made small fortunes in the "traffic."

DEPRECIATED MARK.

The very low price of the mark has naturally influenced all the subrosa dealings over the border, and if a possible purchaser actually enters into a serious attempt to contract for automobile chassis, for example, he finds that the catalogue price and the real selling price are two very different things. Some idea of the increase that is figured can be had in the instance of a Mercedes chassis; for this the catalogue price would be approximately 15,000 marks while the selling price would be 60,000 marks. An Opel chassis catalogued, for example, at only 10,000 marks seems very cheap until the actual selling price of from 40,000 to 45,000 marks is mentioned.

It is interesting to note, however, that even at these prices the German product figures out at the French or English rate of exchange to be much cheaper than other European motor cars of the same class. The French and British manufacturers well know that this will be a serious matter when the Germans are allowed to export once more, and will, no doubt, adopt stringent measures to prevent the sale and delivery of these chassis particularly in the Scandinavian countries where they have always had a ready market.

TENTATIVE CONTRACTS.

It is said that several of the German companies have executed tentative contracts for 1920 deliveries of large quantities of chassis to be offered in Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway and Switzerland, many of which will probably be forwarded to colonial markets. One persistent rumor is to the effect that several hundred Mercedes chassis have been contracted for in the United States and will be delivered at the first possible opportunity, although just what the demand for these cars here would amount to in the near future is rather problematical.

At Stuttgart the Bosch factory, grown to many times its original size, has been working for the greater part of the past year on magnetos, starting and lighting sets and spark plugs. It appears that they have been able to get considerable quantities of the necessary material for they have plenty of the finished products ready for shipment.

There are many other important motor-car manufacturers besides those already mentioned who now that they are through with war work are making preparations to arrange their equipment for the production of automobiles, both trucks and pleasure cars. It seems to be the intention of these concerns to build on a larger scale than ever before, and their big factories and plentiful supply of machinery are in their favor. The difficulties, however, which they will encounter in procuring iron, together with the shortage of coal, will put serious obstacles in the way of production.

VALVE SPRINGS.

If the springs of the exhaust valves become weak from use, or heat, the pistons will draw burnt gases into the cylinders, past the valves with the incoming gasoline charge, giving an improper mixture. The valve springs should be tested occasionally to see if they are of full strength. The average strength of a valve spring should be thirty pounds. At high engine speed the exhaust valves nearly always permit some leakage.

DRIVING TO PALM CANYON.

Situated within a pleasant half day's drive of Los Angeles, Palm Canyon, in Riverside county, offers one of the most striking panoramas to be seen in the State. Palms, hundreds of year old, make this point a veritable oasis in the great Colorado desert. Aside from scenic beauty, the canyon has an interesting history. It was visited first by white men in January 1774. At that time Capt. Juan Bautista de Anza set forth from Tubac Mission, Arizona, for Monterey, California with Indian guides, who took him along the approximate route where the ocean to ocean highway is being constructed today.

EARLY HISTORY.

Anza was accompanied by Padre Garces. They established the route later used by all travelers from Southern Arizona into California. The most notable layover point on the whole route after leaving Yuma was Palm Springs, about a mile from the proposed State highway, and now reached by the Riverside county road from Banning.

According to legend, some of the Padres wandered up the valley southeast of Palm Springs and following the stream, planted the seed which have since marked these canyons as the native habitat of the fan palm. It is claimed by others that these palms, which scientists describe as a separate and distinct species because of the peculiar threads which the edges of the fronds carry, originated in this desert area. This claim is somewhat substantiated by the fact that similar palms cannot be found elsewhere in the world.

BEAUTIFUL SPOT.

A party from Los Angeles, traveling in a Silvertown equipped Studebaker Sedan found this canyon one of the most entrancingly beautiful spots among Southern California's wonderful scenic attractions. The introduction to Palm Canyon is as nearly dramatic as nature can make it. Leaving Palm Springs and following an ordinary desert road, which the officials of Riverside county have recently improved, the view is rather monotonous, as the scenery resembles that of any other portion of the Colorado desert.

When the car reached the top of the grade the party, turning their backs upon the desert, exclaimed aloud at the magnificence of luxurious vegetation stretched below them in striking contrast to the wilderness behind.

Palms—single, in clumps, in groves, thousands of palms—adorn the canyon. It is as though one had suddenly been placed in the midst of a fruitful, tropical valley.

Following a path, the party left the comfortable Studebaker at the end of the road on Hermit's Ridge and scrambled down into the canyon.

ANDREAS CANYON.

A mile or two below Palm Canyon, and to the west of it, lies Andreas Canyon, named after the sly old Indian chief, whose home in a cave near the ancient Indian village of Rincon is still a point of interest. Andreas learned the secret of obtaining "firewater" from grapes and, according to George Wharton James who describes this section in his splendid descriptive work, "Wonders of the Colorado Desert," the intoxication of the Indians of Andreas Canyon was for a long time a great mystery to the whites in Palm Springs.

It is understood that the officials of Riverside county are making great efforts to have these canyons made a national park.

After visiting these two canyons, the party returned to Los Angeles, well satisfied with the two-day trip. The Studebaker performed in its usual perfect manner, and the Goodrich Silvertown tires demonstrated their strength by roughing it over sharp rocks without a cut or puncture. As one of the party remarked, "It was a trip back into the Garden of Eden, without anything unpleasant from car or tires to remind one of the modern method of transportation, and other parties wishing to make the trip will find the maps and road logs furnished by the Goodrich Travel and Transport Bureau thoroughly accurate and reliable."

CITY LANDMARK MELTS AWAY.

It is a matter of continual amazement to eastern guests to see the rapidity with which buildings are erected in Los Angeles. They seem to think there is something magical about the way the vacant lot of last week houses the finished home of today. A talk with Los Angeles builders would convince them that the only magic about it is the marvelous ability of modern machinery to produce quick results.

About the best example of this in Los Angeles today is to be found at Seventh and Figueroa, where one of the landmarks of the city is melting away with what seems uncanny speed to the watcher until he gets a few figures on how it is done from W. E. Hoover, who has the excavation contract for the future motor car establishment of [illegible] nold.

Vivisectionists, Here's a Chance

YOU like to do a little cutting in the study of anatomy. We've done it for you. Not on a cat, a dog or a guinea pig, but on a motor truck.

The boy cut the head out of his drum to see where the sound came from. Another youngster used a chisel on his watch to learn what made the wheels go 'round.

We've performed the most thorough and scientific operation on the vitals of a motor truck that local history has any record of.

WHY WAS IT DONE?

We did it to let you see what a MACK truck is made of. The patient's vitality has not been destroyed, however, as every part is "alive" and functions just as it does when the truck is on the road.

We've told you about the MACK heat-treated and case-hardened crankshaft and camshaft. Here we let you see them in actual operation. Road Improvement in Santa Ana Canyon.

A Cole Aero Eight, piloted by H. L. Perkins, sales manager of Davidson, House & Meyer, toured over the new highway last week and found it one of the most interesting spots in the south. The new road, when completed, will be one of the finest in the State.

PERMANENT ROAD IN SANTA ANA CANYON.

ORANGE COUNTY BUILDING ONE OF FINEST BOULEVARDS IN STATE.

In the event the Corona road races are ever revived, Los Angeles motorists will have an opportunity to get better acquainted with what is likely to prove one of the most popular drives in Southern California. And if the road races in the Circle City are not brought to life again, these same motorists undoubtedly will find opportunity to make use of the road which is variously known as the Santa Ana Canyon road and the Whittier-Riverside boulevard.

NOT BOULEVARDS.

Up to the present the description conveyed by the term road has fitted it better than that suggested by boulevard, but within a comparatively short time it will rank with the finest boulevards of the State.

Orange county is now engaged in paving with concrete that portion of the winding stretches that follow the course of the Santa Ana River from a point near Peralta eastward for about five miles, up and down a grade and around picturesque hills, and the work probably will be finished in a period to be reckoned now in weeks rather than months.

A Cole aero eight, piloted by H. L. Perkins, sales manager of Davidson, House & Meyer, distributors of the Cole line, visited the location last week for an inspection of the progress of the road work. What was found impressed the Cole sales manager so much that a trip he had calculated would take not more than two hours was stretched out into the better part of a day.

INTERESTING.

"The manner in which the work is being done should interest all motorists," Mr. Perkins said, "because anyone can see that Orange county is putting in the road with a view to its permanency. I learned a lot about road making talking to the men who are building it.

"When finished, the Santa Ana Canyon road will make it possible to travel from Los Angeles to Riverside and back with changing scenery all the way, enabling motorists to select as the going and return trips a journey along the Foothill boulevard and routes paralleling it to Riverside and on to Covina, Rincon, Peralta, Olive, Orange and Whittier, or the reverse of it, at their option."

GREAT YEAR FOR SPEED.

casual notice that marked the year was the passing of the Cincinnati and Sheepshead Bay board speedways. Both of these plants are to be demolished. Chicago's first speedway of this type has gone so that the new structure now under construction at Beverly Hills will give this city the only board course of size and prominence in the country. It will open with a Washington's Birthday programme that should set it in the fore of racing ranks.

Noncompetitive marks for 1919 were more numerous than ever.

With a special car equipped with an aviation motor of 905 cubic-inch piston displacement, Ralph de Palma last year set automobile records that may be looked upon as having reached the peak.

WIDE SPEED RANGE.

De Palma's records conform strictly to all A.A.A. requirements. They covered a speed range from 149.72 m.p.h for the one-mile test to 132 m.p.h. for a sixteen-mile test, which was the slowest of the set. Critics say it is not known that any form of locomotion made by man to travel on the ground has ever equaled the speed of De Palma, and there is little reason to expect his marks will be surpassed for many years to come, although speculating upon the speed of the future is hazardous.

The possibilities of great speed in cars of small piston displacement was demonstrated repeatedly during the year. The most noteworthy were: The driving of 300 miles at an average speed of 92 miles an hour, 200 miles at an average of 90.75 m.p.h., and 100 miles at an average of 97.6 m.p.h.

SELECTIONS.

There was no national selection of a champion driver for 1919. However, a prominent publication devoted to motoring interests, which originated the custom of naming an annual champion, has announced its selection of Eddie Hearne as the year's leader. The following table shows how this selection was determined:

(Points were allotted on the following basis for the principal track and road races of the year: 10 points per mile for first place; 8 points per mile for second; 6 points per mile for third; 4 points per mile for fourth; 2 points per mile for fifth.)

REAL EVIL OF CHEAP WIRING.

complaints silently borne by the storage battery, the generator starting motor and lamps are largely traceable to the wiring between these units. This does not mean to say that the units never are at fault, but I am inclined to suspect the wiring first.

ALWAYS SCARCE.

Good wiring is scarce on American cars, which, built for production requirements, are cheapened where you cannot notice it. I am familiar with a number of automobile owners whose experience has taught them that it is best to buy the very best grade of insulated wires and cables and place these on a new chassis instead of the stuff supplied. They are not merely attached, as were the other wires, but the terminals are more firmly secured and water and dirt-proof conduits supplied to protect them.

I shall illustrate the practical value of insulation by recalling the case of an owner whose troubles with headlamps and ignition and starting were beginning to be unbearable. The lights were dim, the starter turned over but meekly; the whole electrical system of the car seemed debilitated.

The battery was removed and charged from an outside source four times, then it was given up to the battery man with the remark that it must be near the junking point. But the battery man knew better. The battery was O. K., he said, and the trouble must be with the charging or with the cutout or the wiring.

REAL FAITH.

This owner had such faith in the wiring that he had the generator fixed up, the cutout examined, the meter checked before he had anything done to the wiring. But he learned eventually that the insulation of the charging wire (the positive) was bad, not visibly so, but, nevertheless, about to fall away from the copper wire.

At one point the copper was showing through, and here and there was intermittent contact with the frame of the car, but at a point where it could not be seen—under the foot boards. Close examination of the remainder showed the insulation to be badly cracked at dozens of places. The cable was water-soaked and dirty as well.

The first thing to do when the lights grow dim and the starter is weak is to test the battery solution, and if its gravity is 1280 or better then the battery is all right. Since the battery feeds at speeds usually below fifteen miles an hour and the generator takes the whole load above that speed, if the lights are dim below fifteen miles an hour suspect the wiring; the feed out of the battery, in other words.

FRAYED INSULATION.

Frayed insulation at the terminals often allows a strand of wire to get loose and touch another wire or contact point, and you immediately notice a slight irregularity in ignition or lighting. In the average car the electrical connections are in a bad place—behind the instrument board—and you must either remove the board or fuss underneath and take a chance on trying to feel the trouble. The charging current travels through the ammeter, if there is one. A bad connection at the meter opens the circuit and the guardian of the whole system is put to sleep, which means you don't know whether the battery is getting food or not.

A car is driven over all sorts of roads in all kinds of weather, and naturally water and dirt will get onto the parts. The wiring housed in the frame channel or on the engine side of the dash is not excepted. On a rainy day the fan draft carries water into the engine compartment and the wires and cables get their share. Continue this for many months and the cables soon soak up enough moisture to keep them constantly wet, hence giving continual trouble.

The use of electrician's tape is all right, but if an unprotected wire or cable starts fraying or cracking replace it.

DINNER IN HONOR OF PACKARD PREXY.

Distributors of Packard cars from all over the world were hosts at a dinner given at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in honor of Alvan Macauley, president of the Packard Company.

Over 100 distributors were present who had gone to New York to see the automobile show. Among these was Earle C. Anthony of California, who spoke at the dinner on the subject "Looking Ahead in the Industry."

ESSEX MOTOR CARS

Essex Sets World 24-Hour Road Mark of 1061 Miles

Unmatched Endurance Proof Made by Stock Essex Over Snow-Swept Iowa Dirt Roads

Already driven more than 12,000 miles, an Essex stock touring car has established a new world 24-hour mark of 1061 road miles, over frozen, snow-bound, dirt roads of Eastern Iowa.

Not a stop was made for repairs or adjustments. Running day and night, Essex completed the gruelling test without a halt except for fuel and oil. Not even a tire change was made.

The average speed was 47.3 miles per hour.

Essex Also Holds the World's 50-Hour Mark

An Essex stock chassis also holds the world's 50-hour endurance mark of 3037 miles, made under A. A. A. supervision, on the Cincinnati speedway.

In three starts, the same Essex ran a total of 5870 miles in 94 hours, 22 minutes, actual driving time, averaging more than a mile a minute.

Doesn't It Settle the Light Car Question?

Prior to Essex, light weight in an automobile meant principally moderate price, and perhaps gasoline and oil economy.

Light cars had no distinction of speed or power. Buyers did not expect fine appearance and performance.

The coming of the Essex changed that. It brought fine car quality, speed, power and endurance to the light car field. Its performance was matched only in the large costly car class.

Is it any wonder that Essex has made a world's sales record of more than $35,000,000 paid for 22,000 Essex cars, in its first year?

We are already booking orders for spring delivery. There is no possibility that all buyers can be served. Now is the time to make your reservation.

Says Cost of Car Production Steadily Rising.

Labor Troubles Add Greatly to Expense Account.

Elmer Apperson of Apperson Brothers' Automobile Company probably, with his brother Edgar, the only one of the real pioneers of the motor-car industry in America still actively identified with prduction, is in Los Angeles for an indefinite stay.

Mr. Apperson is not in the most robust health and has come to Southern California for a period of rest, following the arduous task that confronted all manufacturers upon the transition of their plants to war work and the return to peace production. For his special use while here, Mr. Apperson had shipped an Anniversary Eight Apperson touring car, and in it he expects to drive to all points of interest in this locality.

Automobile manufacturers throughout the country are having many difficult problems confront them, said Mr. Apperson, to Harris M. Hanshue, manager of the local branch of the company. The cost of production is rising steadily. This applies particulary to labor and that is the most important item entering into the cost of all materials. Details that exist throughout the country are well known and all manufacturers are subject to them. Motor car builders who have worked for years to establish a reputation for a high-grade product cannot afford to see this prestige lost. They cannot produce, though, at the old prices, and so it may be expected that increased prices will be observed throughout the motor car business during 1920.

LEACH PRE-VIEW MAKES HUGE HIT.

CARS TACKS UP TO EVERYTHING IMPLIED BY EMBLEM—A BEAR.

Applying motion-picture methods to the automobile business has just been successfullly accomplished in Chicago, acording to a telegram sent back from the Windy City to the Leach Biltwell Motor Car Company.

"We gave a pre-view here on the Leach power-plus six and everybody said the car was just what the little emblem implies—a bear," E. P. Hughes wired M. A. Leach.

"Everybody that has seen the car says it is sure to be one of the hits of the show," Hughes's telegram added.

The Leach company, aside from having its show car on exhibition at Chicago, will be represenetd by C. N. Graves and C. F. Crank. They have with them something like half a ton of literature. Most of it deals with the Leach power-plus six, the new factory and the possibilities of motor-car manufacturing in California, and the rest is straight California "booster" material.

OUTSIDE DEALERS NOW GETTING CARS.

The arrival of cars for the Standard Steel Automotive Corporation with the resumption of production by the factories, is helping not only the local organization, but is assisting outside dealers in developing valuable territory that has been hitherto unworked because of a huge shortage of cars.

When the first new Standard eight arrived in Los Angeles, according to C. P. Vauclain, president of the Standard Steel, arrangements were made whereby not only the local company could resume business, but it could also assist the outside dealers. Hadlock & Morgan, Hollywood distributors for the Standard eight, were first to be benefited.

LAW WILL PROTECT OWNERS, DEALERS.

FIGHT FOR ENACTMENT OF LEGISLATION IS FINALLY REWARDED.

Signalizing the passage of an ordinance by the Los Angeles City Council designed to unmask automobile dealers who pose as individuals forced to sacrifice their cars, a banquet was held by the Used Car Dealers' Association last Thursday evening at the Union League Club.

Attorney Dave Smith, counsel for the association, who waged the organization's fight for the enactment of the legislation which affords protection to licenes dealers and the public, reviewed for the members the terms of the new ordinance.

"Under the State laws any person who sells more than one automobile a month is classed as a dealer, and under the terms of the new ordinance any person who attempts to engage in the sale of used casrs must first procure a license and then display a sign in the English language stating that he is such a dealer," Attorney Smith said.

AMERICAN MAKES HIT IN NEW YORK.

ALSO DRAWS RECORD CROWDS TO ITS SALESROOMS IN THIS CITY.

While at the New York Automobile Show, which has just closed, and at the Chicago show, which has just opened, the American six is making a bit hit with motorists and dealers who have gathered in the big cities for the shows. It is making just as big a hit with the Los Angeles motorists who remained at home.

That is the belief of E. J. Carpenter, distributor for the car for Southern California, Arizona and Nevada, who has just placed the car on display in this territory. As proof of his assertion, he merely points to his temporary showrooms at 1215 South Flower street, which are always crowded with motorists.

BIG MILEAGE RECORDS NOW VERY COMMON.

That advanced methods of tire manufacture are conducive to long mileage is impressively shown in an incident that happened in the sales office of the Miller Rubber Company in Akron the other day.

A 38x7 Geared-to-the-Road Cord tire, used on a rear wheel of a South Summer and Johnson street bus in Akron, was turned in at the factory with a record of 21,500 miles of service.

Eventually the tire reached one of the offices in the sales department and a young man who chanced to be on duty there at the time—he had not been with the company long—went into ecstasy over the splendid performance of the tire.

TRUCKS A FACTOR IN MERCHANDISING.

Commerce of the country is dependent in large measure upon transportation, and the motor truck, in the past few years, has become a factor in the matter of merchandise transport. Because of the trucks communities in various sections of the country have been brought into closer touch with large centers with the result that commerce in general has been expedited.

The development of the motor truck to a point where it is capable of assuming responsibility that calls for positive performance is ble for the position it now This development was given during the war period. The manufacturing methods of the Motors Company, for instance gether with an intelligent policy make possible the pro of a high grade truck at a ably reasonable selling price.

MOTOR CARS VS. TIRE LIFE.

That the car is an important factor in determining the mileage of any tire, is the opinion of Dr. T. B. Cook of Pasadena, owner and driver of a Peerless eight, in a statement made last week to Stanley W. Smith, of Smith Brothers, Southern California distributors of this high-grade car. This has been amplified by Smith, who insists that much credit is due the driver for big tire mileage.

"Dr. Cook tells me that he has two tires on his Peerless eight that have gone 42,000 miles. The tires were on the rear wheels, when they were retreaded at 25,000 miles, and placed on the front wheels. In his opinion the light weight of a car and the proper distribution of this weight, combined with the smoothness of action of a multi-cylindered engine, makes for a long tire mileage. This type of engine has a continuous impulse of power and a complete elimination of throbbing. These several factors must necessarily reduce wear and tear upon tires to a marked degree," stated Smith in recounting the conversation.

REORGANIZE SALES STAFF.

Expansion of the organization handling the Miller ad-on-a tire was accomplished last week, when A. R. Goodale, manager of the International Sales Corporation, added two new men to the sales staff of the company. The men are W. H. Huyler and E. B. King, both known through long years of service as salesmen on Auto Row.

Mr. Huyler, one of the new members of the International company staff, in addition to years of experience as a salesman, has had years of experience on the sales staffs of firms handling tire accessories and half soles, and additional treads for tires.

With the reorganization of the sales staff of the organization, C. W. Howard, sales manager, will remain in charge. The salesmen, in addition to handling the local trade, will make trips to various parts of the Southern California territory to assist dealers in their work.

KEEP PACE WITH DEMAND.

People who want to get things done in a manner to attract attention have but to study newspaper headlines, and by so doing, if they emulate the example set, they will say what they have to say in the fewest possible words, do what they have to do in the shortest possible time and throughout it all inject the greatest amount of pep they can into their particular tasks.

KEEPING PACE.

This, in brief, is the view expressed by R. C. Rueschaw, vice-president and general manager of the Mitchell Motors Company, Inc., in a letter to George W. Franklin, manager of the Security Motors Corporation, Mitchell distributor here.

The Mitchell motors executive's letter was on the subject of how the factory is trying to keep pace with the demand for cars. "We are putting the lessons learned during the war to work," he declared. "The old saying—time is short—was given a newer and stronger meaning during the war, because then minutes meant lives. So the doing of tasks quickly, and in a better manner, became more and more an American habit.

"People now show impatience at time lost in any direction, and this is nowhere more appreciated than in the automotive industry. We are doing our level best to make every minute count for increased production and a better product."

"The General" Says:-

Do you know why so many apparently new batteries give out shortly after they are installed? Not always because the batteries themselves are defective—but frequently because they are not really new batteries. When you buy a battery you pay the price of a new one—the dealer sells you a battery that is new so far as previous sales are concerned. But you don't always get a new battery. For two, three or sometimes six months that battery has laid in stock, filled with powerful acids that cause a steady deterioration of the cells, losing some of its energy every hour. And then you wonder why your "new" battery lacks "pep."

...TT MORELAND ...ENIES RUMORS

...Planned by Tim-...oit Axle Company.

...Capital Simply to ...in Production.

...Produce Everything in ...Own Factories.

...announcement a short ... the Timken-Detroit ...ompany was increasing its ... there have been persistent ... the effect that the company proposed either to consolidate with other interests or to sell its assets.

General Manager Watt L. Moreland of the Moreland Motor Truck Company, a large user of this company's products, is in receipt of definite information from the company denying absolutely and emphatically that such action is contemplated. The rumor is entirely erroneous and without foundation.

There is no intention of consolidating or selling to any new interests. The increase in capital was authorized for the purpose of providing sufficient capital to take care of the rapidly-growing demand for Timken-Detroit axles. It became quite apparent early last year that it would be impossible for the company to supply the demands of its customers, but plans were formulated for increasing the output as rapidly as physical limitations would permit. So buildings were started and machinery ordered in June, and the decision made to increase the capital.

Of the capital authorized $5,000,000 of the preferred has already been sold, and over $2,000,000 of the cash has been invested in plants and equipment.

As a recent meeting it was decided that expansion on a much larger scale would be made during 1920 to provide for at least 50 per cent. increase in output in 1921. Not only will the output be greatly increased, but it was decided that the company would produce, in its own factories, still more of the important materials which enter into its product, thereby adding greater insurance to its customers, and having in mind greater efficiency and reduced costs.

The Timken-Detroit Axle Company operates its own malleable foundry, steel foundry, forge plant, and gear plants, both bevel and worm, having acquired, when the company engaged in the manufacture of worm-drive axles a number of years ago, the exclusive American rights for the famous David Brown of Huddersfield, Eng., patented machinery and its latest improvements in type of worm.

Special Speedometer Installation.

When the new Fords with instrument boards arrived in Los Angeles the Stewart service station was all prepared to install speedometers. Special machines were obtained for boring the holes through the steel board, turning a hard job into a small one. Harry Ungar of the Stewart service branch is demonstrating the new instrument.

SURE BAROMETER ON TOURISTS IN CITY.

NEW CUSTOMERS ALONG AUTO ROW GIVE LINE ON HEAVY TRAVEL THIS YEAR.

The tourist rush is on in earnest, there being no surer barometer than that encountered all along Auto Row, where new customers are being added daily by many concerns. And when these patrons are asked for their addresses the answer is likely as not to be a town in Maine or any one of the thousands of others in the States that separates that commonwealth from California.

"Why, it seems that every time I look out my window here, I see a machine or several of them bearing license tags from States all over the nation," C. H. Kay of Kay and Burbank Co., commented last week.

"I suppose the other fellows on the Row are having about the same experience that we are here. Our service men tell me that practically every time a newcomer drives up his first remark is something like this:

"'Well, I see this is headquarters for Exide batteries, so I thought I would just drop by and have you take a look at my battery. I've been following out the factory's instructions to have regular inspections made, and I know from my own experience that as long as this practice is kept up my Exide will never give me any trouble.'"

NOISELESS CARS BEST FOR THE SPEED COPS.

WOULD ENABLE POLICEMEN TO OVERTAKE SPEEDER WITHOUT DETECTION.

That all the speed officers should be equipped with Stearns automobiles to make arrests on the highways, is the belief of C. E. Van Hoose, made popular in Saturday Evening Post stories by the late Charles E. Van Loan, as "T-bone Riley."

"T-bone Riley" some time ago made a purchase of a Stearns car from the Lynn C. Buxton Company, Southern California distributors for the car. He was told that because of the sleeve-valve construction of the motor, the car would grow even more quiet with considerable use than it was when he bought it.

The peculiar part of the affair was that it really did, according to Mr. Van Hoose. Since it has been used considerably, the only time another car can tell he is coming is to see his tail lights and then he is going. If the speed police were furnished with Stearnes, Mr. Van Hoose says, they would find it easy to overtake the speeders without their presence being detected, thus eliminating the element of chase that enters into the capture of many of the speeders.

So quiet would the Stearns car grow with the continuous use given it in the police department, according to Mr. Van Hoose, that after considerable use they would grow quiet enough to be put into the "gum-shoe" department and thus render efficient service.

MOTOR TRUCK GAINS FOOTHOLD IN HAWAII.

HEAVY TRAFFIC BEING CARED FOR ON VARIOUS ISLANDS OF THE GROUP.

To most of us the dreamy climate of Hawaii is associated with the weird sweet music of the ukulele and the grass-dress dancing of the the laguid tropics.

Yet in this modernized bower of Eden the motor truck has not only made its appearance, but has gained a foothold that the island might keep pace with the other busy marts of world trade.

The Federal truck, one of the first trucks to be placed there, has been a favorite in the island for years. It is a significant fact that the Inter-Island Steam Navigation Company of Honolulu which does considerable traffic between the various islands has found Federal trucks suited to their purpose.

They have found the trucks speedy, dependable and fitted to perform every task of haulage. The Wells-Fargo Express Company at Hilo also have Federals at work besides Allen & Robinson, Inc., in the lumber trade.

The types of work performed by the more than 200 Federals are as numerous as the tasks of the island. Express companies, flour mills, pineapple growers, lumber concerns, general express companies, use Federals for their varied tasks.

SPECIAL MACHINE INCREASES SPEED.

STEWART FACTORY HAS DEVICE ON WAY BEFORE NEW CARS ARE ON MARKET.

Exigencies of modern business often demand quick thinking. The Stewart-Warner Speedometer Corporation, manufacturer of various necessities not included in the equipment of many automobiles, probably more than any other concern must watch every move of every part of the automobile industry, as very often that move is one of vital importance to its business.

For years the company has been manufacturing speedometers for Ford cars, which have not been equipped with them. Only lately, however, the car has been improved by the addition of a new starting and lighting system and as a result each car came equipped with an instrument board of steel.

The Stewart company, was on the alert and as soon as the announcement of the change in Fords was made plans were perfected whereby the owners of the new Fords could be supplied as well as the owners of the old cars. Each dealer was supplied with a specially made, electrical-driven circular saw, made especially for sawing in the new steel instrument board the hole for the speedometer. In addition the speedometers were turned out so that they might fit the new instrument board with a special facing to preserve the beauty of the board, as well as to put the speedometer in plain view.

TRUCK WORLD TAKES UP PNEUMATIC TIRES.

COMING TO BE RECOGNIZED AS STANDARD ON LIGHTER WEIGHT TRUCKS.

"It must be a source of considerable satisfaction to the engineers of the Commerce Motor Car Company to observe the daily increasing trend of the motor-truck world toward the use of the pneumatic tire for all trucks up to two tons in capacity," declares Freeman A. McKenzie, distributor for the Commerce truck for Southern California.

"It is a fact that the Commerce engineers were the first to equip their trucks with pneumatic tires, and their experience with pneumatic truck tires as a consequence probably exceeds that of almost any other American motor truck manufacturer. The use of pneumatic tires has an extremely important bearing on motor truck design, and Commerce has made a very exhaustive study of the matter.

"The coming of the pneumatic for trucks is a very logical development to expect. Practically the only advantage of the motor truck over the horse is in the matter of speed in the last analysis. The pneumatic tire greatly increases the permissible speed of the truck, and therefore gives the truck that much added efficiency."

A LONG-DISTANCE SELLING RECORD.

What is claimed as a long distance selling record was established by the Packard agency of Pittsburgh, when they shipped a four-ton Packard truck to the island of Guam. The truck was purchased for work with the Pittsburgh-Des Moines Bridge company, who have a government contract on the island.

Guam lies 6230 miles west of San Francisco, and is so small that the truck could easily make the circuit of the island in a day's run. It is thirty miles long and six miles wide.

ENGINEERS ARE TO BE PRAISED.

Work on Standardization of Greatest Importance.

Co-operative Proceedings Give Game Big Boost.

Economy and Speed in Production are Results.

The word co-operation has been overworked in many respects, but without doubt real co-operation, which means consideration of the views and interests of competent men in a given scope of work, is one of the most vital elements in modern industrialism. The world has seen no more admirable and effective example of co-operation than that of the automobile engineers.

CO-OPERATIVE.

It was their co-operative proceedings which placed the American automobile in its high rank among the products of the world. From the start the standardization achievements of these men, begun fifteen years ago, have been based on thorough study, merit and common sense. Great economy and speed of production of high-class automotive vehicles of many kinds now well known have resulted from their broad and intelligent procedure.

The specific things done to this end are too numerous to mention. Briefly, there have been made available to engineers in general good specifications for materials which they must use; by elimination of immaterial differences in specifications and concentrating upon types of undoubted merit quality has been enhanced, price has been reduced and the ready securing by manufacturers and users of articles from stock supply has been made possible.

The modern use of automobiles and much other automotive apparatus would not be possible if the far-sighted automotive engineers had not standardized and reduced to almost universal practice such articles as spark plugs, screws, bolts and nuts, materials of many kinds (including, of course, metals,) many features of ignition and other electrical apparatus, piston fits and piston-ring sizes, carbureter flanges, rod and yoke ends, cotter-pins, lock washers, shaft fittings, test-specimens, tubing sizes, metal band and strip sizes, anti-friction bearing sizes, belt and pulley widths, flywheel housings, engine support arms, valves, fuel pipe fittings, flexible tubing, batteries, and many other things including most prominently rubber tires.

STANDARDS.

The Society of Automotive Engineers has established nearly 300 distinct mechanical and material standards, specifications, mounting dimensions of parts and accessories, and the like. And the work has only begun. Design and improvement thereof in automotive apparatus have been in no way impeded. By simplifying the routine work of the draftsmen and the engineers the way has been opened widely for advanced constructions and those novel features, which make the designers' work worth while. The saving of money and time resulting from the existence and use of S.A.E. standards has been and is enormous.

The American automotive engineers have been the progenitors of the world-wide standardization movement now so plainly seen. Wise simplification of details, which standardization is virtually important in international trade. This is appreciated keenly by those manufacturing countries throughout the world now striving to control the key industries.

HARTFORD CORDS ON AUTO SHOW CARS.

Of all the inside information drifting back to the Pacific Coast pertaining to the national automobile shows at New York and Chicago none affords such satisfaction to Frank Price, president of Nelson and Price, Inc., as that which he has obtained from a number of sources.

It all deals with the representation on show cars of the various makes of tires. What proved particularly gratifying to the distributor here of Hartford cord and fabric tires is the statement that some of the very finest of the cars exhibited are Hartford equipped.

FOULED PLUGS.

The best method of cleaning spark plugs that have become fouled with oil is to boil them up in a solution of washing soda and water.

ELECTRICITY AND GREDAG.

Many years have passed, each one showing greater strides toward the betterment of the motor car, truck and tractor. The manufacturer of automotive machinery has during the past few months concluded that much of the service required by users was due to improper lubrication.

The manufacturer has found that owners of motor cars, trucks and tractors or their employees will allow anything that bears the name of grease to be applied to their machines.

REAL REASON.

This is the real reason for the painstaking tests that the manufacturer of the motor car, truck and tractor has gone to and the outcome of these tests has convinced him that poor lubrication is the cause of so much of this costly service.

There could be but one solution to such a condition and the result is that science once more was called-upon to overcome this evil as it has done in every event known to mankind—the wonderful science of electro-chemistry by which 2000 horse power of electricity is harnessed to produce the product invented by Dr. Edward G. Acheson.

E. G. Acheson has been awarded twice the John Scott medal by the Franklin institute of Philadelphia for his research work. He has been presented the Perkins medal and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences has awarded him the Rumford medals.

Up to the time that Dr. Acheson discovered the electric furnace process of making graphite, the world was limited in its application and use of graphite to the flake and other varieties made by the hit-and-miss process of nature. When Acheson-graphite comes from the electric furnace there is no refining or purification necessary. It is of high purity, great uniformity and possessing certain definite chemical and physical properties. This graphite is a lubricant in itself and penetrates a 40,000 screen to the square inch.

Acheson-graphite which is carried to the bearing surface together with the other materials, which comprise the highest grade of pure neutral base oils, inedible fats and the highest quality of caustic soda and lime, will penetrate into the pores, and under the most exhaustive test, even after the other materials which are used to carry the graphite have disappeared, the bearing has run for several hours without causing any excessive heat.

Acheson-graphite together with the materials used to carry it to the bearing, is placed on the market as Gredag. There are no perfumes used, as the method of manufacture prevents any possibility of the fats becoming rancid. Many of the greases sold as lubricants are perfumed to hide the presence of decomposed or poor grade fats.

OWNERS' SERVICE DEPARTMENT.

Q.: I have an Overland, model 83, and recently there developed some trouble in the rear axle, which as you know has the transmission in unit. In running in first or second speed there is a great deal of noise, as though the whole axle was falling to pieces. In high there is hardly any at times, and then again there is a great deal. Would you take the whole axle apart or is it something that can be remedied without much trouble?

A.: Without question the countershaft bearings are "all shot" and you will have to replace them. I hardly think this can be done without removing the torque tube and transmission unit together with the differential housing cover. The best job can be done with the entire axle detached from the car.

Q.: The engine of my car is thermosyphon cooled and on a cold day the water freezes solid after running about fifteen minutes. I put a piece of paper on the radiator, but it falls off. I ordered a radiator cover, but in the meantime tell me what to do when it freezes.

A.: Stop the car, but allow the engine to run slowly. Keep pouring water into the radiator and cover the front lower half of the radiator. As water boils off, keep adding more. Don't allow an appreciable amount to boil off.

Q.: When running in snow and ice and one of the wheels starts slipping, is there any chance of damaging the rear axle by continuing the spinning of the wheel?

A.: There is little likelihood of damage being done.

Q.: I am the owner of a 1920 Ford car with a starter, and I would like to ask the following questions: (1.) How is the generator connected with the motor; by chain, gears or in what manner? (2.) What mechanical device is employed to allow the engine to jump away; that is, free itself from the starting mechanism after the motor starts to turn over on its own power? (3.) What would happen if a person failed to remove his foot from the starter pedal after the engine had started? (4.) If the engine kicks, is it likely to injure the starting mechanism?

A.: (1.) The generator is driven by helical gearing from the cam shaft. (2.) This is accomplished by the use of a so-called Bendix drive pinion on the end of the starting motor shaft. This pinion is mounted on a quick thread. The pinion automatically engages and disengages with teeth on the flywheel. (3.) It is likely to jam the starting pinion and possibly break it and the starting motor shaft. (4.) If you will study any starting system on any car today you will see exactly how the Ford starter works. They are all practically alike. Also write the Ford company for detailed instructions in regard to the care of the system.

Q.: Please let me know what to do in case my radiator freezes. After it starts to steam, then what?

A.: Keep pouring water into the radiator while the engine is running and cover up the lower half of the radiator. This is necessary in order that some of the water always be kept hot, which in turn will melt the ice in the lower part of the radiator.

Q.: If suddenly the gears of a car were hard to mesh and at the same time there was a grinding and sometimes knocking coming from the transmission, what would you suspect? I know it is difficult to tell exactly what is wrong, but what would your guess be. It even knocks in high.

A.: A worn countershaft bearing.

PLAN HIGHWAY COURSES.

The introduction of courses in highway engineering into the curriculums of the leading colleges and universities of the country is being urged by representatives of motor-truck builders. It is claimed the Department of Agriculture has an abundance of good, practical road men, but no highway transport scientists and until the national government sees fit to create a highways bureau of the best versed men in the country there will be great loss of money and enterprise as the roads that are built today to withstand the demand of traffic cannot successfully be built as were the roads of a decade past.

According to W. O. Gates of the Gates-Kelley Automotive Company, distributors of Jumbo trucks, it developed at the recent meeting of motor truck sales managers at Detroit that the road-building authorities of the country are many of them, failing to realize their responsibility to the public by neglecting to specify construction of less mileage, if necessary, but more durable.

It was pointed out that there are now less than 100,000 miles of what may be termed heavy duty roads of the 3,500,000 miles of roads in the country, and that even with the most active work on the part of everybody it will be years before the country has anything like an adequate system of roads capable of carrying heavy truck traffic.

TRUCKS TREBLE BUSINESS.

"We are doing three times the volume of business we did four years ago, mainly attributable to the fact that we have a new selling machine on the job—the motor truck."

"This statement, made by Daniel Burkhartsmeier, president of a cooperage firm of Chicago, indicates the position gained by the motor truck today," says an official of the Pierce-Arrow Motor Company. "Once regarded solely as a delivery medium, the motor vehicle has proved to be a business stimulant in many cases."

Mr. Burkhartsmeier, who experimentally purchased a five-ton Pierce-Arrow truck in 1914, found that the vehicle multiplied his business field eight-fold. He now operates one five-ton and six two-ton units. His factory, located about eight miles south of the Chicago loop district, limited deliveries to that distance in the days of horses. Now deliveries are made twelve miles north of the loop and as far as South Bend, Ind., sixty-five miles from the plant.

"Trucks cover a much larger area, enable quicker deliveries, permit a faster turnover, effect the economy of a larger production fostered by them, and give us direct advertising through their presence on the streets," said Mr. Burkhartsmeier.

The firm's larger truck has a capacity for 150 barrels. Formerly it was uneconomical to deliver less than a carload lot, 500 barrels. Now instead of two, three or even five-day freight service, barrels can be delivered the same day they are ordered.

"In fact, during the freight car shortage of the winter of 1917-1918, trucks literally saved our business," said Mr. Burkhartsmeier.

SPEED UP TRUCK OUTPUT.

"If every truck manufacturer in the United States doesn't strike twelve every time at the appointed hour the year 1920 will just take him apart and see what is clogging his works," remarked Watt L. Moreland, general manager of the Moreland Motor Truck Company, Wednesday, just before starting on a speedy eastern trip.

"It is to be a year of unprecedented realization of what trucks can do, in speeding up and generally facilitating everything in the general scheme that affects our pocketbooks and our comforts, and the tremendous demand to follow that rushing realization. The manufacturer is to be put to the test. He must do his utmost to keep ahead of the demand, though I doubt if it can be done. He must hustle up materials and, through efficient shop practice and harmonious employee relationships, speed up production. The result will show the quality of metal in the industry.

"Trucks must not only be run out in constanty flowing streams, but they must be of the finest quality, workmanship and engineering. They must be made even more efficient and economical money makers for the owners as well as giving the most efficient of service for those who benefit from them.

'Last year truck production increased from 227,250 in 1918 to 305,142, while the production of passenger cars fell off. This shows what the truck makers can do, but they will do better. Experts estimate that around 400,000 trucks will be produced in 1920. There is a tremendous wave of good road building going on all over the country. Here in California the State and counties expect to spend something like $12,000,000 on this work. That makes trucks and more trucks."

The Cleveland Makes Good
Because it IS so Good

"The Cleveland is in a class by itself." That's the answer from owners of the new Cleveland Six all over America.

The Cleveland has made good with the public in such a big way, because it is so good.

Men of engineering and manufacturing skill, and of high ideals, devoted three years to the development and perfection of the Cleveland Six before they offered it to the public. Experimentation was worked out in the Cleveland Company's laboratories and shops and in constant tests on the road; not in the hands of owners.

So the Cleveland has made good.

The thousands of Cleveland Sixes that have gone out to owners since last July are performing as few cars, indeed, can perform. The power and life of its motor, its remarkable comfort in riding, the ease of handling, the beauty and graceful style of its body designs, the excellence of its finish and upholstery, truly place the Cleveland Six in a class by itself.

We cannot tell you how good the Cleveland Six is.
You must drive it and ride in it to know.

TRUCK OWNERS TO GET IT ONCE MORE.

REDLANDS AUTHORITIES WANT HELP IN KEEPING ROADS IN REPAIR.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, Jan. 22.—The City Trustees of Redlands want some help. They are anxious to know just what is to be done with the truck problem. In the past year the trucks have increased in number until 50 per cent., and possibly more, of the supplies used in this city that came from Los Angeles by rail are now coming by truck.

The result is that the streets of Redlands, especially the main roads, are used so much more than formerly that it is much more costly to keep them up. The City Trustees feel that the trucks, whose loads do so much to break up the pavements, should pay for the upkeep of these roads, but they are not sure just how to go about it.

For instance, much of the hauling is done by local men. They are perfectly willing to pay a business license, which would help to keep the roads in repair. But they do not want to pay it when trucks from Los Angeles can bring in goods and use the roads without paying any business license.

The truck man in Los Angeles pays his license there, presumably, and would kick about paying another here. But the Trustees feel that possibly it will come to that, the paying by the truck man of a license in each city in which he operates. The plan here is $25 a year for one truck, $40 for two trucks, $50 for three and $10 for each additional truck that one firm operates.

Judging from investigations that the Trustees here have made, other cities are also having trouble. They have all been attempting to frame ordinances that would do the work without putting a hardship on anyone.

LARGE SHIPMENT OF CRUDE RUBBER.

The largest single shipment of crude rubber in the world has arrived in Akron from New York and is being unloaded at the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company. It would be sufficient to supply the world for three days. The total value of the shipment is approximately $4,412,200.

The long train of fifty-three cars—stretching nearly half a mile—brought 7,916,000 pounds of the commodity that has made Akron the rubber center of the world. The shipment consisted of 39,580 200-pound cases, each car containing 200 cases.

OPTIMISM HIGH AT MOTOR SHOW

Many Factories Already Sold on this Year's Production.

Lack of Color in Displays is Disappointment to Some.

Franklin Truck Announcement Creates Interest.

In interest and attendance the National Automobile Show in the Grand Central Palace, at New York City, exceeded all previous exhibits of the kind. There never has been apparent so much optimism, according to Ralph Hamlin of Ralph Hamlin, Inc., the Franklin distributors, who returned last week. Mr. Hamlin has been one of the most regular Los Angeles visitors to the national event and is qualified to express an opinion.

LACKS COLOR.

To the visitor from Los Angeles, who is not accustomed to factory shows, there would have been a measure of disappointment at New York, Mr. Hamlin believes. That is because the show was lacking in color. In this city it has been the custom to exhibit cars finished in special colors, almost exclusively. Here the cars are fitted up with all sorts of extra equipment and there are many unique and novel designs. But at New York there was hardly anything but the sombre blue, black and green tones that represent standard production. That was because the show was conducted in the interests of the manufacturers in relation to dealers and few factories encourage special colors.

There have been national shows at which the representatives of the factories worked incessantly to interest dealers in the efforts to have them place large orders. Not so, this year, Mr. Hamlin says. The producers know that the demand for cars during 1920 will exceed the supply. In fact, many of the factories already are oversold on their estimated production. That gives them an independent attitude toward dealers that never before was as apparent as at the recent event. Dealers this year are "running after" the factories instead of vice versa.

LACK SPACE.

None of the really new cars for 1920 were on display at the Grand Central Palace. That is because display space there is allotted on the basis of the previous year's production and as these new cars were not in production last year there was no space for them. In this connection, Mr. Hamlin says the Franklin factory this year had one of the best display spaces in the show. It was not always thus, however, as the dealer says he can remember at some of the earlier shows when the Franklin was housed in an out-of-the-way corner up close to the roof. Increased production is what has brought about the change.

CONFERENCE.

During the process of the show, the H. H. Franklin Company held its annual dealers' conference. This year the event was the largest ever held. The dealers were addressed by S. E. Ackerman, the sales manager; Ralph Murphy, the chief engineer; Hugh Goodhart, director of advertising and publicity, and other factory officials. The dealers showed particular interest in the announcement that the Franklin company will produce a four-cylinder truck of one-ton capacity. This truck will represent an innovation in commercial vehicle construction as it will have the same light-weight features as those that characterize the Franklin passenger car.

TESTS CAR UNDER EVERY CONDITION.

EVEN GASOLINE IS EXAMINED FOR CARBURETOR ADJUSTMENT.

The degree of thoroughness with which a modern automobile factory tests out every conceivable condition under which their car may be called upon to operate is rarely appreciated by the average motorist. There is of course a wide difference in operating a car in midsummer in Arizona, for example, and in Maine in midwinter, yet the same model of car is expected to function properly under both conditions.

ACTUAL TESTS.

"The way in which the Marmon factory tested out the carbureting system of the post-war Marmon furnishes a good example of the thoroughness with which modern motor car engineers investigate every angle of every function of the various parts of the car," declares Al G. Faulkner, Marmon distributor for California.

"Realizing that gasoline might be one thing in Indiana, and quite another in Ohio or New York or California, the Marmon department of research and experiment obtained samples of fuel from a dozen different Marmon dealers all over the United States. Each was requested to send four representative samples of what passed for gasoline in his territory. Then the factory experts got busy and analyzed them all.

WIDE VARIANCE.

"As might be expected, they found an immense variance. Some parts of the country sent in fairly good gasoline—others could be more properly termed kerosene. The weight of the samples varied from 6.13 pounds to the gallon up to 6,39. There was wide difference, too, in the samples from the same sections. From a western section, for example, 95 per cent. of one sample was distilled at 338 degrees, while 386 degrees were required to accomplish the same result with another.

"The tabulated results showed that it is very difficult to establish one carburetor setting which will yield equal performance in all parts of the country. The tests, however, did enable the Marmon engineers to establish an average setting which efficiently meets the needs of the abnormally uneven grades of gasoline on the market.

SAND BLISTERS.

A very small cut, especially in the rubber tread of a rear wheel, will usually permit the entrance of sand or dirt, which will work along into a pocket between the tread and the fabric and as a result will form a bunch that will soon wear through and make a serious tire injury. Such a bunch should be cut open, the wound be cleaned out and filled with gum, and vulcanized if it is big enough to warrant the operation.

MASTER VIBRATOR.

The primary current should never be run through the master vibrator coil when the secondary circuit is not in use, as this will ruin the unit.

The Whole Secret of A Better Tire

Simply a Matter of the Maker's Policies

This you will realize—once you try a Brunswick—that a super-tire is possible only when the name certifies that the maker is following the highest standards.

For tire making is chiefly a matter of standards and policies—cost plus care. Any maker can build a good tire if he cares to pay perfection's price.

All men know Brunswick standards, for Brunswick products have been famous for 74 years.

Formulas, fabrics and standards vary vastly in cost. Reinforcements, plies and thickness are a matter of expense. And these variations affect endurance. It rests with the maker how far he wishes to go—how much he can afford to give.

For there are no secrets nor patents to hold one back.

To ascertain what each maker offers one must analyze and test some 200 tires—as our laboratories have done.

Then it is a matter of combining the best features and building according to the highest standards.

Once you try a Brunswick you will understand how we have built model tires, regardless of factory expense.

Yet Brunswick Tires cost you the same as other like-type tires. Our saving is on selling cost, through our nation-wide organization.

We realize that you expect more from Brunswicks, and we assure you that you get it. ONE Brunswick will tell you the story.

And then you'll want ALL Brunswicks. No other tire, you'll agree, gives so much for your money.

Examining Three Perfect Tires.
Ed M. Snuffin and M. N. Alderman of the local branch of the Ajax Rubber Company looking over the three standard tires made by Ajax.

STRONG FRAME ESSENTIAL.

"When a man buys an inclosed car of any type, there is no single feature of its construction he should investigate more carefully than its frame," declares Gilbert Woodill, manager of the Western Motors Company, Kissel distributors. "The reason for this is obvious when you consider the nature of the construction of any inclosed type of body.

ONLY A BOX.

"Practically speaking, any enclosed body is nothing more nor less than a box, rigidly built of hard wood. It is evident, therefore, that if the frame beneath it does not give it support of the firmest sort there will be constant racking and twisting of the body.

"In many erly taypes of inclosed cars this was what actually occurred, and as a consequence the body quickly developed a variety of squeaks and rattles that made riding in it anything but a pleasure.

"The designers of the Kissel custom-built six were among the very first to appreciate the importance of an extremely rigid frame for any inclosed car. The same considerations apply in lesser degree to any type of open car, but it is extremely important that the inclosed car shall have a rigid 'foundation.' Not only is it necessary to have ample depth to the frame itself, but the matter of cross-members is equally important.

CHANNEL STEEL.

"The frame of the Kissel car is five and one-half inches in depth and is constructed of extremely heavy channel steel. It affords the type of support which an inclosed body must have if it is to render the right sort of service.

"Another interesting feature of the new Kissel coupe, which we have just received and which is the first of the new series of Kissel inclosed pansion joints' to allow for the expansion joinst' to allow for the expansion and contraction of the body under extremes of temperature. These joints are tightly packed with a thin layer of felt, which absorbs the expansion when heat swells the body. The felt also prevents the possibility of squeaks developing at these points in the body.

"It is a much more difficult job to build a first-class inclosed body than any other type. The newest models of the Kissel are excellent examples of high-grade modern coach work, and have attracted not a little attention since their arrival."

HANDLEY-KNIGHT MAKES PUBLIC BOW.

Organization of the Handley-Knight Company, a new corporation that will start with a working capital of $1,000,000, was announced today by J. I. Handley of Kalamazoo, Mich.

The new corporation, which will manufacture a four-cylinder Knight-motored car, is backed by some of the most substantial banking and industrial interests in the western part of the country, although included in the interests behind it are many strong influences in the East.

Economy Without Sacrifice of Comfort

"Unusual comfort possibilities" is your first impression of the HOLMES IMPROVED AIR-COOLED CAR.

That a seven-passenger touring body of such dimensions and luxury may be had on a car averaging 18 to 20 miles to the gallon of fuel and 10,000 miles to the set of tires is proof that economy is practical without paying the price of cramped discomfort and restricted carrying capacity.

In the Holmes Chassis such standard parts are used as have become accepted as correct construction for high quality cars; Timken Axles, front and rear; Brown-Lipe Transmission and Clutch; Timken Bearings throughout; Gemmer Steering Gear, Spicer Universal Joints, Pressed Steel Frame, narrowed in front for short turning radius.

OWNERS DESIRE CUSTOM BODIES.

Craze for Special Jobs Hits the Whole Country.

Many Points to be Considered in Rebuilding Machine.

Real Chassis Worth Should be Basis for Work.

Since automobiles are produced in great quantities and sold at a comparatively low price, it is but natural that these so-called "production" cars will bear certain earmarks which put them out of the exclusive class. The desire on the part of every automobile owner is to have a car different from the rest and his search for the exclusive inevitably leads to the door of the special-body builder.

The special body on a standard chassis gives a car quite a distinctive look, and if money is no object every whim and fancy of the owner can be satisfied. There are certain factors which must, however, be given very careful consideration, otherwise there may result either an improper combination of chassis and body or wasteful expenditure or both.

FIRST CONSIDERATION.

First consideration must be given to the value of the chassis upon which the new body is to be mounted. Sometimes a good second-hand chassis is worth a better body than a new chassis of cheap manufacture. Some chassis are not worth fitting with anything but a production body, as the resale value will be judged by the condition of the chassis only.

Bear in mind the parallel that it is not worth building an expensive home in a cheap unrestricted neighborhood, and by the same token it is most unwise to fit an expensive body to a cheap, short-lived chassis. If you decide to have a special body built on a new chassis worth, let us say, $1000, it is obviously wrong to look at open bodies worth twice as much, for such a combination will result in a car which will go to pieces, though it will look well. A fairly good rule to follow is, never spend more than half the value of the chassis for a new open body.

STUDY DESIGN.

Before you drive into the body-builder's shop study the new body designs, so you will know exactly what you desire. Don't let the body builder do all the thinking, because he very often will think in terms of saving money for himself. Know what you want in lines, in trimming, in finish, etc., and then find out the cost. If you own a good open car in the medium, or high-price class and require an inclosed body, don't cheapen the whole car by trying to buy a cheap body.

If you look over inclosed bodies for such cars as Cadillac, Hudson, Packard, Winton, etc., you will find that the prices run from around $1200 to as much as $4000. Up to $1700 the body is a cheap one beyond that you are getting into the more useful and serviceable class.

If the chassis has seen some use do not attempt to have a new body mounted unless the chassis is put in first-class mechanical condition. It may seem that the cost of repairs and replacements is a little too much, but you will find that it does not pay in the end to put dress clothes on a cripple that cannot go out to society functions.

QUITE POSSIBLE.

It is quite possible in the larger cities to purchase new inclosed body shells at very reasonable prices. It is good business to do this and results in just as good a body as a newly-made one. The shell is the body minus trimming (upholstery.) This sort of body may be upholstered to taste, and when repainted properly cannot be distinguished from a brand new one. One must be careful, however, in purchasing one that it is sure to fit the chassis.

Sometimes the dealer in his anxiety to sell will say most anything, so the safest way is to make him sign a contract, just as he makes you sign. His contract to you should stipulate that the body will fit to your satisfaction, that it will be the exact body you select and will be painted with so many coats, etc. Don't take things for granted; get everything in writing.

LOOK 'EM OVER.

This brings up the matter of getting what you really buy. In some of the larger cities there are body dealers who style themselves custom-body builders. When you go in you are shown various bodies in the course of construction and you are very much impressed with the goodness of the work. If you buy an aluminum body you must know that such a body is on your car when you receive it. It is of the utmost importance that you get a contract stating exactly what you are to receive for the money you pay.

Go into every detail of trimming, of finish, of the fit of the hood and cowl; whether you are to receive a new cowl and hood; have it stated in writing that your body is to be of new stock and not remade, if that is the sort you are buying. A good plan also is to go to the body shop while your particular body is in the course of construction.

When the delivery terms are mentioned indicate a maximum time to be allowed, as one month or six weeks, or, if you are not in a hurry, give the builder all the time he asks. Usually you will have to wait a week longer than he asks, anyway. Do not figure on any appreciable value for the old body unless it is a custom job also. The average stock body is usually sold for junk.

GIVE "BONE DRY" A NEW MEANING.

VERY FEW OBJECT TO TERM WHEN APPLIED TO STORAGE BATTERIES.

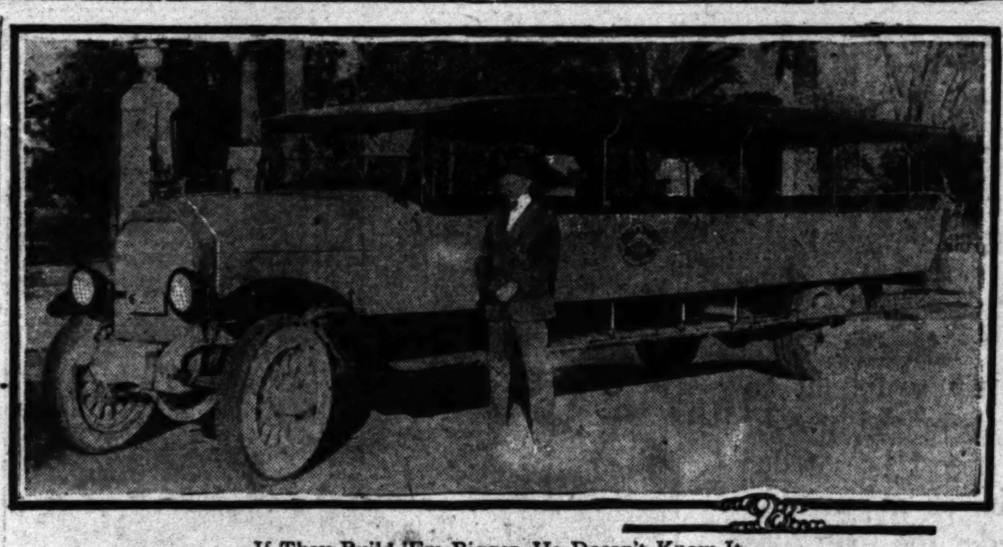
Political conditions throughout the country have caused another word, "bone-dry," to be wedged into the English language, just as the war brought forth "camouflage," "slacker" and a few others, and the verb, "to vamp," was included by the movies.

Some intensely dislike the new word and others just as intensely approve of it as far as it is applied to the drinking conditions of the country. All, however, unite in its approval when it is applied to automobile storage batteries. Just as the legislators made the word by the elimination of liquors the Willard company has made the word as far as it applies to batteries.

Some time ago, before the invention of Willard threaded rubber insulation for storage batteries, all batteries were shipped from the factory with the battery solution already in them, according to A. J. Tobey of the Western Auto Electric Company, distributors for Willard batteries. This was due to the fact that the wood that was found in the batteries, had to be treated to remove acids, and after this was done it was necessary to keep the battery wet with a solution in order that there would be no warping or shrinkage of the wood. Finding that the introduction of the solution in the battery at the factory lessened the life of the battery, a system was evolved whereby the solution was drained off and the battery was made air-tight.

CHAIN LOCKS.

A rather long hook on the inside chain and a small, strong padlock on the outside chain will fasten the anti-skid device on the wheel, so that there is no danger of its coming off and winding around the brake drum or being dropped in the road. Releasing the padlock will allow enough slack of the inside chain so that the long hook may be unfastened.



If They Build 'Em Bigger, He Doesn't Know It.

A huge passenger bus owned and built by Mr. Henderson of this city. Many of these machines are used for location work by the various moving-picture companies. The truck is equipped with Firestone tires—giant pneumatics on front and giant solids rear.

MILEAGE CUT IN HALF BY NEGLECT.

TREAD GIVES AWAY FIRST, BUT CAN BE REPLACED IF FABRIC IS NOT DAMAGED.

That standard makes of tires gives less than one-half of the mileage that is in them, and that the reduced mileage is due directly to ignorance of tire users, is the belief of H. D. Warfield, of the Warfield Tire Service Company, city dealers for Gates half sole tires, and other Gates products.

The tread of a tire, according to Mr. Warfield, is the first part of a tire to become worn. This is easily accounted for in the fact that to give comfort to the user of the car, it is necessary to make the tread of a rubber, which, although it wears well, naturally becomes worn before the harder and tougher fabric and carcass of the tire becomes at all damaged. The discarding of a tire because the tread has become worn, or allowing it to wear through the fabric, is where tire users lose considerable money, according to Mr. Warfield.

To avoid waste of the very useful and costly fabric and carcass after the tread has been worn, the Gates half sole tire was invented. It is an oversize half sole that is scientifically adjusted to the fabric of the tire and serves in the place and with all the effectiveness of a tire. When it becomes worn, and it gives from 6000 to 12,000 miles, it can be replaced, adding another half sole until practically three or four times the greatest possible mileage of the original tire is obtained.

FISCAL YEAR REPORT SHOWS LARGE GAINS.

INCREASE OF OVER FIFTY PER CENT. SHOWN OVER FORMER YEAR'S TOTAL.

That the Mason tires are increasing in popularity over the whole nation as well as on the Pacific Coast and in Southern California is shown in the third fiscal year report of the Mason Tire and Rubber Company of Akron, O., which has just been received by the C. Fred Thompson Company, Southern California distributors for Mason tires.

The sales of the Mason Tire and Rubber Company for its third fiscal year, ending October 31, 1919, amounted to $3,468,858.52, with a net profit of $223,705.52. This is an increase of about 50 per cent. over the preceding year's totals. Sales for the second fiscal year of the company, ending October 31, 1918, were $2,324,144, with a net profit of $203,436.81 and sales for the first fiscal year amounted to $1,213,859 with a net profit of $104,457. Although sales have increased enormously the profits of the company have not increased proportionately, owing to the company's policy of absorbing increases in materials and labor rather than adding the extra cost to the prices of tires and tubes.

OIL DELIVERS GOODS AT ANY TEMPERATURE.

FLOWS FREELY ON COLDEST DAYS AND LUBRICATES PROPERLY.

"If the oil in your engine will congeal, or thicken excessively, at 15 deg. above zero, you should hardly expect it to splash and flow freely at 12 deg. above zero," said Mr. C. H. Hamilton, district sales manager of the Standard Oil Company, yesterday.

"Yet some motorists wonder why it takes so long to get the engine to run freely these cold mornings. The cold engine, not getting sufficient lubrication, is subject to excessive and damaging friction. The oil pump cannot circulate congealed oil, so there will be an insufficient supply thrown upon the cylinder walls—until the struggling motor has warmed up the oil so it will flow more freely.

"A zero-cold test oil flows freely at all temperatures down to zero, that's why it is called a zero-cold test oil. Zerolene medium (or Zerolene light for Fords) is a zero-cold test oil. It is correctly refined from selected California crude oil and flows freely and splashes properly at all temperatures down to zero. This zero-cold test oil gives the same correct lubrication to your engine during these cold days that you are used to getting during the summer months."

WESTERN DISTRICT LEADS THEM ALL.

Eastern and southern districts of the United States do not show the demand for motor trucks that is experienced in the western and central districts, according to the final scores reported in a Packard truck sales contest just finished.

The western district came in first with a percentage of 124, overselling its expected quota almost one-fourth. The central district exceeded its quota by nineteen per cent., while the eastern and southern district fell behind the amount expected on the basis of previous business to eighty-two per cent. and eighty-four per cent. respectively.

TROUBLES OF DELIVERY.

To Miss Gertrude Kirk, Dodge Brothers' dealer in Placerville, belongs the distinction of making one of the longest "driveaways" of which the Dodge factory has record. On her return from France, where she served as a canteen worker, Miss Kirk stopped at Detroit and secured a Dodge touring car, in which she made the balance of her return journey to California. Her only companion was Mrs. George L. Pavy, yet together they made the [illegible] journey of more than 3000 miles without mishap.

The season was very late when they set out from Detroit, and their journey through Iowa was made difficult by constant rain, which converted the Iowa roads into seas of mud. More than 250 miles of road was encountered so deep with mud that it packed around the steering gear in a fashion that made it almost impossible to turn the wheel.

EXECUTIVE OFFICES TO BE MOVED HERE.

WILL OCCUPY QUARTERS FORMERLY HELD BY SERVICE BRANCH.

Announcement of the removal of the executive offices of the Samson Tire and Rubber Corporation from the factory at Compton, to large and commodious quarters at 333 West Pico street was made this week by Adolf Schleicker, president of the concern. The service branch of the company has been established at this address for several months.

"This step was necessary," Mr. Schleicker said, "because of the constantly increasing volume of business. We found it expedient in view of the added efficiency and time saving, to move the offices from Compton. The number of repeat orders is growing, indicating our product is daily proving its superiority to thousands of car owners. I believe 1920 will be the biggest and best year we have ever had. Our tires are practically a Los Angeles product, being manufactured at the factory at Compton. We manufacture the only cord tire on the Pacific Coast and our chief aim is the highest possible quality at the lowest consistent price."

THE experience of Hupmobile owners in this vicinity shows that in the important item of tire mileage the Hupmobile stands exceptionally well.

Eight, nine, even ten thousand miles from the original tires are some of the reports which come to us.

We know, of course, that the Hupmobile is exceptionally economical on tires. But it is pleasant to have the fact confirmed by people who drive the car every day.

The Hupmobile displays the same saving traits in the use of gasoline and oil; and costly or extended repairs—barring accident—are practically unknown to the average owner.

We shall be glad to direct you to owners who can tell you not only of Hupmobile economy, but also of its extraordinary performance and its splendid service.

This chart has been worked out by leading automobile engineers. It shows how quickly an automobile, going at various speeds, should be able to stop if the brakes are efficient.

How quickly could you stop?

Don't wait for an emergency to test your brakes

WHEN the unexpected happens can you count absolutely on your brakes? At the moment they are most needed will they act quickly, surely and safely?

They are out of sight and for that reason are frequently not given the attention which they require. Yet on their efficiency depend your enjoyment and safety.

With so much depending on good brakes is it wise for you to neglect them?

A simple inspection by your garage man will tell you definitely if they are safe. Perhaps only a slight adjustment is necessary to make them dependable instead of doubtful. If they do need relining you most certainly want to know it.

Endorsed by automobile manufacturers

The engineers of fifty leading manufacturers, ten axle makers, and countless jobbers and dealers have selected Thermoid Brake Lining because they know its dependability.

1. More material, greater service—There is over 40% more material and 60% more labor used in the manufacture of Thermoid Brake Lining than in any woven brake lining. This abundance of material and labor must mean longer wear.

2. Grapnalized—an exclusive process which creates resistance to moisture, oil and gasoline. Under ordinary conditions of service, Thermoid is impervious to any kind of moisture.

3. Hydraulic compressed, uniform throughout—Every square inch of Thermoid is hydraulic compressed at a pressure of 2,000 pounds.

Because of this, Thermoid is uniform all the way through. It cannot compress in service. There are no soft spots to wear out. It must give uniform service until worn cardboard-thin.

The measure of Thermoid value

These three exclusive features form the measure of Thermoid value to the motorist—his assurance of longest, safest service at the lowest possible price.

Have your dealer inspect your brakes to-day. He will show you Thermoid Brake Lining that you may see why it is so different, so efficient and long wearing. If he hasn't Thermoid we will gladly send a sample.

Be sure to accept no substitute, our guarantee protects you. Thermoid will make good—or WE WILL.

The Way Bumps Look The Way Bumps Ride

Wonderful Riding Qualities In Coast-to-Coast Trip

ON rough highways and desert trails, in sunshine and storm, the Overland 4 Four-Door Sedan blazed the trail for the U. S. Army Pioneer Motor Transport Train from Washington to San Francisco. This plucky car was ever in the lead.

It was still another convincing demonstration of the wonderful riding ease of three-point suspension Triplex Springs.

Cushioned by these Springs from the shocks of rutted, rocky, torn-up roads, the Overland 4 glided along with a smoothness never before enjoyed in a light weight car.

Dr. Johnson, official lecturer for the Lincoln Highway Association, rode the entire distance from coast to coast in the Overland 4 Sedan. He pays this splendid tribute to its exceptional performance:

"I found the Overland 4 Sedan so suited to my needs that I rode in it from choice all the way. It must be the new spring arrangement, for even when the roads were rough I came to the night stops without fatigue. It is a marvel of ease and comfort."

Overland 4 Sedan weighs only 200 pounds more than the Touring Car

REPUBLICS are Powerful!

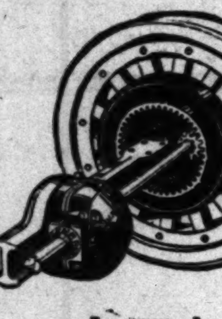
Power is one of the things you want most in your motor truck. Power for the steady hard pull; power for the steep grades and power for the mud and sand and heavy going of all descriptions.

Republic Motor Trucks, with their Internal Gear Drive, deliver from 12% to 26% more of the motor power to the driving wheels than in any other form of drive.

That extra power may mean the difference between getting stalled and taking the load through on time. Over a long period of time it will mean the difference between a money making truck and a money losing truck.

But extra power is only one of the good features of Republic Trucks. Every part is over size and over strength to insure perfect performance under the severest strains.

Before you buy any truck get all the facts about these remarkable trucks that have climbed to first place in the whole truck industry within 5 years. Come in and let us show you why.



Internal Gear Drive

The Internal Gear Drive, applies the power nearer the rim of the wheel. That means greater leverage and more power.

MAY HOUSE AUTO SHOWS.

The decision to rebuild the Shrine Auditorium and make of it a larger and finer structure has been a subject for comment among the automobile dealers of the city. As suggested by H. C. McVey, the Oakland car dealer, this may mean the solution of a permanent location for automobile shows in Los Angeles, a problem that long has been a source of worry.

Los Angeles has had some of the most remarkable motor vehicle shows in the country and every one has been held only after overcoming the enormous difficulty presented by the housing problem. There is not, at this time, a building in the city of sufficient size to accommodate a motor car show. It has been proposed that this year the show be held again but members of the Motor Car Dealers' Association admit they are at a loss to know where to find a location.

The old Shrine Auditorium was the scene of a number of events of this kind but it became too small, or, rather the shows became too large. Tents have been used upon several occasions but the expense of this sort of housing and the unsatisfactoriness of it do not make it desirable. Therefore, according to Mr. McVey, who has left to attend the national show at Chicago, if the new Shrine Auditorium can be built to provide a place for automobile shows it will fill a long-felt want.

GOLDEN STATE IS THE MOTORISTS' PARADISE.

SO SAYS YOUNGEST PRESIDENT OF A LARGE EASTERN TIRE CONCERN.

California of ten years ago and California of today are not the same. In fact, there's such a difference that those who sojourned in our midst a decade ago would hardly recognize the country now.

DIDN'T KNOW IT.

"Why, people who came here for a visit ten years ago and went away as I did, thinking they had really seen California, are laboring under a misapprehension, to say the least," is the declaration of J. B. Linerd, president of the Globe Rubber Tire Manufacturing Company.

"People who dropped in on California for a week or two or a corresponding number of months ten years ago, owe it to themselves to come out here now," the tire company executive declared, adding enthusiastically, "and when I get back East you can bet I am going to suggest just such a trip to a lot of friends of mine.

"They think they have seen California, but what they saw, as I did ten years ago, wasn't a circumstance to what they can see today. It's absolutely astounding what changes have been wrought. Take the roads, for example. Being a tire manufacturer, I am quite naturally interested in good roads.

GOOD ROADS.

"Here, again, I want to say that every good roads advocate owes himself a trip out here to see what can be accomplished. When I was here last there were roads, of course, but they were not like the present-day highways. A trip to San Diego from Los Angeles was an event, where now it is a mere incident in a motorist's life. And the same applied to trips to Riverside, Santa Barbara and to other widely known places.

"In the past we hear, of course, a lot about California as the motorists' paradise, and there are a lot of people who regard such a superlative description as publicity, but if there is one community anything like the dimensions of California that deserves this designation any more than California does that place hasn't been discovered."

TEN-ACRE ADDITION FOR TEMPLAR PLANT.

MILLION - DOLLAR FACTORY NEARING COMPLETION IN CLEVELAND.

While in the East, Albert J. Russell, president of the Boulevard Motors Corporation, Southern California and Arizona distributor of the Templar, will spend several days at the Templar plant in Cleveland, where an addition costing about $1,000,000 is well along toward completion. The buildings, three stories high, when completed, will give the Templar factory a floor space of ten acres, according to the information received by Russell, prior to his departure.

"This remarkable progress of a car that is now in its fourth year of production and the production of which was practically stopped in the company's early stages by war work, shows how it has proven its worth. Before this year has ended the Templar plant, barring something now unforeseen will be manufacturing cars at the rate of 10,000 annually. Every part of the Templar will be manufactured, with very few exceptions, within this plant," he said.

LEAKING VALVES.

The first hint of leaking valves is a hissing sound in the cylinders when compression occurs. The best method of following this clew is simply to turn over the crankshaft slowly, listening meanwhile to determine the location of the leak.

SPRING SHACKLES.

Do not neglect the lubrication of the spring shackles. Rust often clogs up the small vents and keeps out the oil. By using common kerosene occasionally these holes will be kept open.

HAUL HEAVY OVERLOADS OF POTATOES.

WOULD BE SOFT PICKINGS FOR JESSE JAMES IF HE WERE ALIVE TODAY.

Were Jesse James alive today there's small chance that the rural banks of Missouri and Kansas would hold a lure for him.

It is altogether more probable that he would transfer the scene of his operations to the paved highways around Los Angeles, where it is no uncommon occurrence to see motor trucks breezing along with a couple of thousand dollars worth of potatoes aboard.

But, then, Jesse James would be out of luck, if he tried any monkey shines with truck drivers, according to Walter Leeman, one of the latter, who says that even if the truck drivers didn't manage to squash such spectacular bandits under a sack of spuds deftly shoved off the load that a motorcycle cop, a fleeting flivver or a Mexican piloting a spring wagon without front, side or tail lamps would prove a nemesis.

Speaking seriously, Walter Leeman, who is one of three brothers who operate a transfer business under their surname, remarked in a discussion with Earl Y. Abbott, manager of the Frank O. Renstrom Company, that but few people have any realization of the tonnage and value of goods transported by motor trucks in and out of Los Angeles.

"Why with our two three and a half-ton Atterburys," Walter Leeman said, "we have hauled nineteen tons of potatoes away from the freight yards in one load, six tons more to each truck than its capacity rating."

TEST FOR PISTON RINGS.

When there is an escape back past the piston rings of hot gases in the crank case inevitably gets warm. On the other hand, if the escape is past the valves, this condition is not found.

PLUG GAPS.

When the spark gap of a plug is too great there is danger of burning out the secondary wire of the coil from the heat engendered by the excessive resistance.

VITAL DECISION IN MOTOR TRUCK CASE.

SUPREME COURT TO DECIDE OWNERS' RIGHTS IN FORFEITED MACHINES.

A decision which will be of vital importance to every motor car and truck dealer in the United States, according to H. C. McVey, the Oakland car dealer, is to be given by the U. S. Supreme Court. The decision will come as the result of a test case filed from Atlanta, Ga., by prominent attorneys representing the Atlanta Automobile Association, on the question of whether an innocent owner of an automobile can be made to forfeit his machine to the government, when contraband whisky or intoxicating liquor of any kind is found in it.

Automobile dealers claim that if a dealer, who is the legal owner of a car, which has not been fully paid for by the nominal owner, is made to lose possession of his property by the search and seizure power of the government exercised in the effort to stamp out illicit liquor dealing, when the dealer has no knowledge of or identification with the use to which the car is put, he is rendered a heavy loss unjustly. Because of the far-reaching effect the decision of the Supreme Court will be watched for with a great deal of interest.

SLOW LEAK.

When the small rubber cushion in the base of a tire valve is displaced in any way it is apt to depress the small core stem of the valve so that a slow leak results, which the car owner probably blames on a tiny puncture.

EXPECTS TO OCCUPY NEW BUILDING SOON.

DEMAND FOR PLASTERERS EXCEEDS SUPPLY AND SLOWS UP WORK.

The general activity that exists in the building line in Los Angeles may have its drawbacks as well as advantages. One advantage that exists, in the opinion of H. M. Hanshue, manager of the Apperson factory branch here, has resulted in Apperson Brothers Automobile Company obtaining a new building now under construction at Eleventh and Flower streets. A drawback is in the demand for plasterers exceeding the supply and there has been a delay in the new structure for this reason. However, this soon will be overcome and Mr. Hanshue expects to occupy the building before the middle of February.

Shipments of Apperson cars have been painfully slow but Mr. Hanshue is bending every effort toward obtaining a complete representation of the line to have on hand when the new building is ready for occupancy.

TRAP GUN AND ROD

ties of Glean, Butte, Colusa and Sutter are the favorite landing and feeding grounds. Coming from the land of the maple leaf, chased by cold winds, ice and snow flurries, those feathered aces celebrate their arrival in the land of continuous sunshine and bountiful crops. Led by old-time honkers of the goose kingdom, who are conversant with all routes and easily locate their favorite feeding grounds of the past, the younger generation are conducted to this haven of rest and bountiful feed.

Arriving over the land of promise, a succession of dives, dips and tail spins are introduced before volplaning to earth, flocks follow alighting until available landing territory is scarcely available, covering the fields until they assume the appearance of an animated snow-covered area.

DESTRUCTION.

With their arrival, the work of crop destruction commences, and green tender blades are devoured to the roots. Geese are a menace to the farmers, but a source of joy and satisfaction to the nimrod. The strong arm of the law issues the edict, "Thou shalt not kill" or have within thy possession in excess of twenty-four geese per week, naming a period from October 16 to January 31 as the open season. One thousand men industriously and continuously engaged in killing twenty-four geese per week the year round would not materially or noticeably lessen their aggregate number.

Prior to the opening of the Exposition in San Francisco a film was made showing this vast and endless flight of geese in action. When shown, it was a source of wonder to sportsmen who had never been present when the flight was on. It was almost impossible to realize that those countless numbers of wild birds existed within the confines of the United States, especially in one locality.

REAL PROBLEM.

Frank M. Newbert, president of the California Fish and Game Commission, an ardent sportsman, and all-round good Indian, has a problem to solve which is a "difficult nut to crack." How to protect, perpetuate and propagate migratory birds, at the same time guard growing crops of indignant farmers from game depredations. It would seem an impossibility to exterminate "snow geese," yet we saw the passenger or wild pigeon passing in countless numbers, their flight at times darkening the sky. Flocks were estimated by Audubon, the Naturalist, at billions within a prescribed radius. They are now absolutely extinct. Bison or buffalo, estimated at many, many thousand, are gone except in localities where they have been semi-domesticated. Migratory game must be protected even though Uncle Sam is called upon to officiate as "meal-ticket" for "white geese."

Question—Why do most of the professionals shoot straight-stocked guns? Do you consider them an advantage in both field and trapshooting? If so, tell me your source of reasoning? I have a gun with a 3¾-inch drop at the heel. It was my father's, and I have done good shooting on all occasions in the field.

RICHARD PHILLIPS,
Canton, O.

Answer—A gun with straight stock shoots a little high from the point it is apparently aimed. This enables you to shoot either targets or game on the ascent, which is logical, as it enables you to follow up your object, shooting while it is in view. With a crooked stock it is necessary to follow to a point where the target or bird is "out of sight," as your gun shoots low. When the object is in sight you are enabled to take advantage of any jumps or dips. Afield you will have many "long falls," as your gun is shooting low and the birds are shot in the feet. While you will make occasional scores at the trap and bring to bag many difficult shots afield, it is an axiom that your success wuld be greater and you would shoot more satisfactorily and consistently if your gun had less drop.

Question—What is the best system for division of money at tournaments? Do you advocate the major portion of the money being awarded low guns?

EVERETT FRIEDMAN,
Omaha, Neb.

Answer—There is no system that has universal indorsement. Localities adopt systems gratifying to contestants. All systems have good and bad features. Would not designate a system, as they are dependant upon the class of men with which you are dealing. The showering of added money to low guns is usually a bid for dishonesty and discourages the shooter from becoming expert. Dropping for place is disreputable and every good clean sportsman should be willing to break every target possible.

SKEPTICAL OWNERS EASILY CONVINCED.

ONE DEMONSTRATION OF POPULAR SHOCK ABSORBER IS USUALLY ENOUGH.

Attracted by the repitition of the slogan "Float-Your-Ford," scores of curious owners of Fords have recently called at the local service station of the General Service Co., to investigate the claims made for the Float-A-Ford Shock Absorbers. Many of them arrived in a doubting Thomas form of mind, but according to the officials of the distributing company, most of them have left with a receipted bill for a set in their pockets.

R. T. Mesker, manager of the local company, when questioned as to a reason for the unprecedented sale of these comparatively new shock absorbers, said, "There are so many accessories introduced for the Ford car that most of the owners of them are a bit skeptical as to the relative merits of the various articles brought to their attention and they all have to be "shown" before they will become convinced that an article will benefit themselves or their car.

"The mere fact that Float-A-Ford Shock Absorbers will not only make riding in a Ford more pleasant, but will materially reduce the wear and tear and increase tire and fuel mileage attracts their attention and arouses their curosity. When they come down here it is a pretty good sign that they are interested and having once had them demonstrated, they become ardent boosters."

MUCH IN DEMAND "MILEAGE HOGS."

In spite of the fact that the demand for tires slackens during the winter months, it has been almost an impossibility to keep up with orders for Victor cords, says Manager N. Bershon of the Bershon Tire Company.

The handsome appearance of the tire, the effective nonskid design, and the reputation for durability that Victor cords have attained, combine to make them very popular.

The first exhibition in public of the new type Packard truck with pneumatic tire equipment was made at the recent New York automobile show. It was shown in two sizes both two and three tons.

This is their first truck designed for use of air-filled tires, and differs in many respects from the line of solid tired trucks.

NEW KING "8"

Tomorrow marks the formal opening of our new home in a spacious three-story building, with a complete line of the new 1920 King Eight models. A cordial invitation is extended to the public and the motoring fraternity to see the first showing of these advanced and improved models.

The Car

One hundred distinct improvements are represented in the new King "8"—improvements that give added assurance that the King "8" of today will satisfy even to a greater degree than the more than 1000 King 8's in this city that are already continually pleasing their owners.

Our Organization

The Pacific Motors Corporation is a concern composed of men long trained in the motor car field. They have invested their money in buildings, equipment and advertising here because they knew from close association with the King "8" in Detroit that it is a car on which it was safe to stake their reputation.

Every man is especially well qualified in his special work and stands ready to serve you.

Our Policy

Every purchaser of a King "8" will not only obtain a motor car that is as good as any other car manufactured and sold today, but he will be accorded a service unprecedented in Coast motor circles.

Our interest in your King "8" will extend through the months or years that follow—it will not terminate with the sale. We have confidence in the King "8" and know what it will do.

The Aristocratic
NELSON

was designed and is being manufactured by E. A. Nelson, mechanical engineer, of Detroit.

Mr. Nelson designed the first little Hup cars you see about. They bring the highest and readiest price of any automobile on the used car market today.

He it was that became the laughing stock of Detroit by designing and placing a pressed metal body on an automobile for the first time in this country. Now all bodies are made that way. His invention for shooting between propeller blades of aeroplanes is considered the best system. He was the first in this country to place a design of that Peer of All Motors, the Hispano-Suiza, in an automobile, and we predict that within the next five years the automobile which has not some design of this type will hardly be saleable.

Why? Because, first, it eliminates troublesome valve adjustment; second, it eliminates carburetion adjustment; third, it eliminates oil pump troubles; fourth, it eliminates water pump and overheating troubles; fifth, it performs per mile on half the cost of ordinary motors. Once you have enjoyed these blessings for only a short while you will demand them in all cars.

WHAT HAPPENS TO OLD CARS?

What becomes of the old automobiles?

Do they disappear? Are they dismantled, or, do they, like the deacon's famous shay, just naturally disintegrate and go to pieces all in a heap?

The question puzzled officials of the Franklin Automobile Company enough to induce them to direct a canvass of all the owners of the first Franklin car put on the market. That car first appeared in 1902 and thirteen of them were sold during that year.

Efforts to reach all of the owners failed, but of those original thirteen cars four were discovered to be still in use and able to take the roads as they come, if their owners cared to bring them out from their places of hibernation. Three others were located, but they were not in such good condition.

One of the first Franklins ever made was sold to S. G. Averell of New York City. Mr. Averell has been in Los Angeles for some time and a frequent visitor to the establishment of Ralph Hamlin, Inc., the distributors here. Mr. Averell made several records in the car as an amateur racing driver and became so pleased with the principles of construction that he has owned several Franklins since the first one. He drove the Franklin car that in June, 1913, made 83.5 miles on a gallon of gasoline. The Franklin then was a four-cylinder car instead of the six it is today.

HEAVY OIL GIVES TROUBLE IN WINTER.

"Ford operators can save themselves considerable trouble during this cold weather if they give proper attention to the Ford clutch," said C. H. Hamilton, district sales manager for the Standard Oil Company, in discussing cold weather lubrication yesterday.

"Many Ford operators complain that when the engine is cold it is hard to crank and the car has a tendency to creep forward while cranking.

"To eliminate as much as possible this cause for complaint, they should first make sure that the clutch throwout lever is adjusted so that, with the hand brake lever set, the clutch is fully disengaged. As this relieves the steel discs in the clutch of all pressure from the clutch spring, it should permit sufficient separation of the driving from the driven discs to allow them to turn freely on each other. This is necessary because the driving discs are connected to the engine crankshaft and the driven discs cannot revolve without turning the rear wheels. But if the lubricating oil used is of too heavy body, the discs will still have manufacture are conductive to long make cranking difficult."

DEVIL'S PUNCH BOWL FILM MAKES BIG HIT.

DEALERS THROUGHOUT COUNTRY WANT CHANCE TO EXHIBIT PICTURES.

"Eighty-six thousand people have already seen it. And 86,000 more want to see it" was the statement of a prominent dealer in automobiles last week, when speaking of an idea developed by his organization.

"When a thought has sufficient punch in it to interest many thousands of people, we believe it is worth while developing," continued this dealer, "and so it was when two young girls set out to drive the Six Arrow to the Devil's Punch Bowl—and we found they could do it—we converted the discovery into an advertisement so strong that it was not necessary to put a word of advertising into the motion pictures of that strenuous drive.

"When the pictures were finished, they contained so many thrills that we were beseiged by dealers throughout our territory, theater managers from almost every town and, as the fame of the S X Arrow spread, we received letters and telegrams from distributors of Essex cars all over the United States.

"As a result of this interest," continued Harold L. Arnold, distributor of Essex cars in Southern California, "this film is now being shown by our dealers, and their reports are that already 86,000 people have attended the exhibition of this film. The thousands who have seen it have marveled at the daring of the young women drivers, but, better than that from our point of view, have realized that any automobile which could survive the punishment given it on the terrific drive through the sand dunes of the desert and the great rock country of the Devil's Punch Bowl must be constructed of the finest quality of material and be put together with perfect mechanism to successfully survive the ordeal."

OIL FOR OLD CARS.

The engine of a car that has been on the road for two or three years will be apt to give better service and more efficient delivery of power if an oil is used that is heavier than the quality which was originally indicated for it.

GASOLINE WEIGHTS.

Car owners may be interested to know that 64 test gasoline, which is about what we get now, weight half an ounce over six pounds to the gallon. On the other hand the 74 test gas that we once got weigh five and twelve ounces to the gallon.

STICK TO YOUR OWN SIDE OF THE ROAD.

"In these days of many motor car accidents, we should endeavor to eliminate every possible source of danger," said Harold L. Arnold, one of the distributors of motor cars in Southern California. "The many dealers of Hudson, Essex and Maxwell cars which we have in the towns of Southern California and Arizona cause me to drive 2000 or more miles each month.

"Everywhere throughout the country I find that hundreds of motorists drive on the wrong side of the road. This is a prolific source of accident."

PUBLICATIONS IN THE REALM OF CHECKERS.

Chess and Checker Headquarters, 714-716 Higgins Building. All chess and checker players invited to join. For further information, see or write the secretary, D. H. Bowes, at the clubrooms.

AMONG THE FANS.

E. H. Payne, formerly of this city, but now a resident of Erie, Kan., won first honors in the Kansas State tournament, which was held at Wichita, January 5-10. Thirty-six players competed in the tourney. Those qualifying for class A semifinals were Walter L. Smith, E. H. Payne, J. B. Marshall, Frank G. Farmer, A. Taylor, I. T. Marshall, E. Bertchinger and J. Brown. Smith finished high in this round, with Payne second. In the play-off of the finals Payne won from Smith, 4 to 1 and 4 draws.

Frank G. Farmer, the veteran Kansas player who has twice won the Kansas championship, also entered the chess tournament this year, which was held at the same place and time as the checker tournament, and won the class B championship. Prof. W. W. Livingston of Fort Scott won the State championship.

FROM AN OLD SOLDIER.

Jan. 16, 1920.

Dear sir: In Times checker column of Sunday, 11th, you tell a little story of some playing in Rochester, N. Y., between T. J. O'Grady and H. B. Reynolds, the story contributed by W. W. Kenfield.

I feel moved to testify that for some years I was well acquainted with all three of those good fellows and good players, and well remember what a pleasure it was for me to get an occasional draw, whatever opportunity came for me to sit in with either of them.

It is now some seven years since I knew them, most of which time I have been living in Florida, the last year or so in California.

Am a lover of the game—an unrecognized hero—yet fully qualified to say that that trio can give a good account of their ability in any company.

May I take time to relate that on my journey from Florida here I played quite evenly with the best men I could meet on my train in and through nearly every State we passed en route.

Should Messrs. Kenfield, O'Grady and Reynolds chance to see this note in your checker column, I think they will remember my name, and feel some of the pleasure that I now do in testifying to their good game qualities. Very truly yours, I am a—To here everything has been regular. Sturges gives play on 23-14 and 32-27.

b—There seems to be nothing better.

c—About the only way I could see for White to lose was to play 8-4, 32-27, 12-8, then 10-14, 17-10, 2-7, 10-3, 16-12 wins neatly.

a—This varies from any play I know. 16-20 probably best.

b—26-30 loses by 31-26, 30-23, 22-17, 13-22, 14-9, etc.

c—"Asleep at the switch," 14-9 wins at once.

d—Now White has to be careful.

9-13	13-22	9-13	7-11

b—This is weak, if not a loss. 17-14, 6-9, 30-26, would run into a strong line for White.

c—White does not seem to be able to put up much of a fight after this. 25-21 might hold out some hope, but as White has much stronger play at "b," there is not much use of wasting time on analysis at this point.

a—In Robertson's Guide, page 276, variation 78, at 2, this move is given to draw, but will it draw?

b—The guide gives 10-14 here and White gets a good game. Will the next move force a win for Black?

c—In Los Angeles Times game, No. 764, 10-14 was played here and White should have drawn.

d—White can make quite a strong fight on some of the endings after this move, but where does the draw come in?

ANOTHER NEW CAR BOWS TO AUTO ROW.

OLD IN PRODUCTION, BUT ONLY RECENTLY INTRODUCED INTO THIS FIELD.

Another new automobile—new in itself, but old in production—has made its appearance in Los Angeles. It is the Paterson. The car will be distributed by the Gates-Kelley Automotive Company, a firm that for several years has confined its efforts to commercial vehicles, but is not without experience with passenger cars, as both W. O. Gates and Leo L. Kelley were formerly identified with this branch of the automotive industry. The Paterson is not unknown to the Los Angeles public, as it was represented here previously and there are a number of cars in the hands of owners.

The car is of very attractive appearance, as its body lines represent the latest trend to blend straight lines and angles with graceful curves. The line includes both five and seven-passenger touring models and the "year 'round" sedan. The initial shipment received by the Gates-Kelley Automotive Company consists of open cars only, but the inclosed models will follow soon.

COMMON MISTAKE IN BODY CLEANING.

WASHING RECOMMENDED AS SAFEST METHOD OF KEEPING PAINT IN SHAPE.

"A common mistake which many motor car owners make in the care of their car is to attempt to remove dust from the surface of the car body with a rag or a feather duster. This is something that should never be done if it is desired to keep the finish of the car unmarred," declares C. H. McKelvey of the McKelvey Motor Sales Company, distributors for the Liberty six for Southern California and Arizona.

"The particles of dust that settle upon a car are just like so much emery powder. To attempt to remove them in any other way than to wash them off is certain to scratch the finish of the car to a greater or less degree. Washing with a gentle stream of water is the only sure way to remove dust without harm to the finish.

"Another thing that is a very good plan to follow is to use separate chamois cloths to rub the body and the running gear of the car after washing. Naturally the running gear will retain more dust and dirt than the body and you are much less apt to injure the finish by following this practice."

FREIGHT-CAR SHORTAGE HURTS

The shortage of freight cars is more pronounced at this time than it has been at any since since the beginning of the war, according to information that has been received from P. H. Greer by A. C. Robbins of the Greer-Robbins Company, distributors of Hupmobile and Chalmers cars. Greer is now in the East, where he will be until February.

Dealers from all parts of the country are visiting the factories urging their claims for increased al-lotments of cars, and at the same time endeavoring to secure cars to handle their present ship-ments. A tremendous increase in evry line of endeavor has brought about a freight-car shortage which seems absolutely inadequate for pres-ent-days needs, although in many undertakings, drive-aways from the factories are resorted to, in spite of cold weather and snow, just as they were during the war.

GARFORD'S CAPITAL STOCK IS DOUBLED.

BIG MOTOR TRUCK COMPANY IS NOW CAPITALIZED FOR TEN MILLION.

President E. A. Williams, Jr., of the Garford Motor Truck Company, with factories at Lima, O., recently announced that the capital stock of the company had been increased from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 to provide for an extensive programme of expansion.

EXPANSION.

This expansion is necessary, Mr. Williams said, to meet the increased demands for the Garford product. It will provide for an increase in production which, within the next year, will be greater by 100 per cent than the present programme.

While the detailed plans for expansion are not as yet ... it was stated than one of the company's first moves will be ... a modern addition to ... 400 feet by 100 feet. This ... will be devoted entirely to the progressive assembly of Garford trucks. By the installation of the latest type of machinery and adaptation of special assembly methods, the Garford, not only ... maintain its present high ... of manufacture, but will ... increase its output and at the ... time keep the cost of production at the minimum.

MORE PROPERTY.

To provide for still further expansion, the company has purchased additional property near its factories at Lima, O. This additional acreage will be utilized in the near future, according to ... plans.

During the present ... plans, through its increased production, not only to keep pace with domestic demands, but to ... foreign demand, which since the armistice has grown to large proportions.

Thirty Million.

IT WAS stated in the papers a few weeks ago that 30,000,000 human beings died violent deaths in Russia during the past three years.

How would you like to have to go to sleep every night in a country like that? How would you like to go there and work at any kind of a job? To put on your clothes there every morning not knowing whether you would ever again be put to the bother of taking them off?

Would you care to risk your throat being cut just for the satisfaction of living in a country ruled by Socialists who tell you that one man is as good as another and a damned sight better?

From what we can remember learning about Russia in the school geography, it is a hard enough country to live in even though no man there would lift his hand to kill a mouse. It is a country where winter lasts eleven months and two weeks every year. It is a land of frozen noses. They wear hats that look like fire plugs painted black. Everything freezes except vodka, which is a kind of whisky worse than the kind bootleggers are peddling in America at the present time.

Add to that the fact that your life isn't worth a whoop in the estimation of any man you may happen to meet on a dark road or any other road, we repeat that Russia is a grand place to stay away from.

We take it for granted that probably about two-thirds of the thirty million people who died violent deaths in Russia during the past three years were Jews. And the question arises, why do Jews stick to such a murdersome country? Why don't they come to America or go to England or to South America where they would be safe and happy?

It is most certainly a tough place. We don't think that even Bill Hart, with a gun in each hand, as he appears regularly in the movies could last more than five minutes in Russia.

We are glad we read about all this in the papers. It makes it so much more a happiness to thank God that we were born and live in America.

The First Pepper Tree.

VISITORS in Southern California never fail to admire the graceful beauty of our pepper trees. This being the case, it may interest them to know that the original pepper tree, the first one planted here, the mother of all the others, is still standing and growing in the patio of the Mission San Luis Rey.

It was Fray Antonio Peyri who planted it in the long ago with his own beautiful, rough, brown hands.

Nor is that the only reason for going to San Luis Rey. It is, itself, the most exquisitely beautiful ruin in the world. The soul of Fray Antonio, and all his dreams of beauty, were put into it.

And you will see there, hung on the walls of the church, one of the most remarkable crucifixes in the world.

It is a lovely journey to San Luis Rey. You go down the coast to Oceanside and then back inland a matter of four or five miles. It is not much of a journey at all from Los Angeles.

And you will find the brown Franciscans there. And Padre Dominic among them.

Our Herbert.

IT IS not the function of this particular page of the biggest and best newspaper in the world to interest itself in politics. But, the humble and unworthy conductor hereof found himself interested, just the same, not long ago. And it happened in Pasadena, to which point all the celebrities of the earth meander, some time or other.

Well, sir, we sat at the feet of one of these aforesaid celebrities in Pasadena. He was from New York, which is as far east as you can go, though the Lord save you from ever being forced to go. And the celebrity was saying that the trend of opinion in the East is all to the good for Herbert Hoover to be the next President of the United States.

What do you know about that! Our Herbert.

This New Yorker said also that he was never more astonished in his life than he was to find that nobody in California at all, from Siskiyou to San Diego, and from the mountains to the sea, as Tom Fitch said, considered seriously for one moment the rumored candidacy of Herbert Hoover for the Presidency.

The New Yorker said he thought he would find us all "rarin'" for Herbert. "Back East," said he, "we think Hoover performed the greatest service of any one man in the war."

Now, when you get right down to brass tacks, Herbert Hoover did perform the greatest service of any man in the war. Only for him there would have been no "eats" over there, and without eats the Allies would have been swallowed alive by the Germans.

Breath of the Pines.

Long was the winding way, and steep,
And the canyon walls rose dark and high;
But far above in the fading light
The cool peaks kissed the sky.

Soft came a breath of the singing pines,
A spicy breath from the woods I love;
For gleamed the snows, pearl-rose and white,
On the sunset peaks above.

And I threw myself at the feet of the pines,
With my tired head on the mountain's breast,
While the wind breathed low in the needled boughs
A soothing song of rest.

The stars burned near and clear and bright,
The full moon silvered the heights of snow;
And my soul reached out to the calling woods,
And cried, "I love you so!"

For a breath of the pines was worth it all—
That long, rough trail to the heart of the wild,
Where Nature welcomed, with loving arms,
Her city-wearied child.

JUNE MELODY.

However, it is perfectly easy to understand why California is not for Hoover. This is his home State, and "a prophet is not without honor, save in his own country."

That's the reason.

When She Went In.

THERE was a news item in the papers not long ago saying that Maud Powell died. It was only a little item. She was merely the greatest woman violinist that ever lived, a God-gifted musician; she hadn't murdered anybody or stolen anything or ruined anybody's life. She had done nothing except to fill the world with melody.

So, when she died there was just a little item about it in the papers. They couldn't shut her out altogether; too many people had known and loved her to permit her death to be wholly ignored.

Some one in the house read the little piece to us at night, after the day's work was done and we were sitting watching the dreams come and go in the wood fire on the hearth. And, after the first heartache passed, we fell to thinking about that magic fiddle that would never sing again, and of that soul of song that had gone forever from here to another country.

We fell to thinking of all the old fiddlers who had gone up to heaven long ago, some of them well known and beloved of us, and we dreamed that we could see them in the picture that the fire made, gathered on the ramparts of the jasper gates to welcome her when the gates swung wide and she went in.

Pagannini was there—him first of all, because he was the king of all fiddlers. And Ole Bull and Edouard Remenyi. And Michael Doherty. They were there on the ramparts to welcome her. And all the gypsy Romanies, too. And the ancient Celtic bards—the harpers and lute-players of Gwalia and of Erin; for she was daughter of their race.

No doubt every day is a wonderful day in heaven, but it must have been a more wonderful day than many when Maud Powell went in through the jasper gates and all the golden fiddles played together to make her welcome.

Dear Celtic sister—farewell and God be with you!

Americans for America.

IT SEEMS to us that the slogan "America for Americans" were better put if it were to read "Americans for America."

Maybe it doesn't make any difference which way it is said or written, and yet all the difference in the world is sometimes made by the simple rearrangement of words in a sentence.

Now, if you were to say that it is your idea that Americans are the only people who should possess, inhabit and enjoy America, that's what is meant by the slogan "Americans for America."

You see, according to the Constitution, the laws and the public opinion of the people, a man can be an American even though he happens not to have been born here. He can declare himself. He can go up to the flag, salute it, and say: "Old Glory, you for me from this time on, henceforth and forever."

The minute a Britisher, a German, or most any other foreign-born human being goes up to the flag and says that, criss-cross his heart, he becomes an American the same as though his forefathers were here since the Mayflower and the time that Sebastian Viscaino landed at Monterey.

But, if any foreign born person, male, female or neuter, fails to say that to the flag, criss-cross his, her or its heart, there is no Americanization to take place whatever. A person may take out citizen papers in seventeen different States, but if said person can't take the flag in his hand, kiss its radiant folds and think it the most beautiful thing that flies over God's green earth, that person is no more an American than George III was.

Wherefore, "Americans for America," say we.

Golf.

WE HAVE been asked to give our opinion of the game of golf, and, since it is our privilege as well as our business to give an opinion on anything and everything, we shall give our opinion of golf willingly and gladly.

In looking up the opinions of others concerning this game, or this alleged game, whichever the case may be, we find that Theodore Roosevelt declared golf to be "an old woman's game."

We have seen it stated also that in order to fully understand and to appreciate golf one must be Scotch. Perhaps there is something in that. Personally we think there is, for the one and only week we ever spent in our lives playing golf we spent it with James Main Dixon, and he is a Scot of the Scots.

Moreover, we are frank to state that golf being peculiarly and originally a Scotch institution, we would naturally be predisposed in its favor, because the Scotch are cousins to the Irish. We would desire to like golf on this account if on no other. But even this we have steadfastly declined to allow to influence our judgment.

We have played golf and we have read golf, and we have come to the ineradicable belief that it is a waste of time. It is the only thing wasteful that we have ever known the Scotch to do. It is almost beyond belief that a Scot could be induced for any consideration—for love, money or health—to spend hours of a day chasing a silly little ball over the landscape; and yet it is true that Scots do it and did it first.

Maybe the truth is that golf was invented by some jesters to prove that the most sensible people in the world can be induced to make themselves foolish.

But, with all that, why did Roosevelt call golf "an old woman's game?" Nobody ever saw an old woman playing golf.

Bryan.

IF WILLIAM J. BRYAN were to again be a candidate for President of the United States and be defeated, we suppose that, personally, it would pass as an incident calling for the expenditure of no emotion on our part.

But, it wasn't that way when he was defeated the first time he ran. He was young then, and we were young; and we were both newspaper reporters. He was only 36 years old. And the glittering prize of the most exalted office on earth seemed to be within his grasp.

The night he went down to defeat our heart ached miserably. Six million of his countrymen voted to make him President, but six million were not enough.

We are sentimental when we are young. And when we are old, or at least no longer young, sentiment goes out of us, more's the pity.

It is a wonder that Bryan didn't die of heartbreak when they defeated him that time he was only 36 years old.

"Tapioca pudding or apple pie?" demanded Cora.

Helen regretted her choice of pie, for the drab crust was wet and soggy. Endeavoring to be polite, she scooped out the insipid apple sauce, blaming her lack of appetite to a late lunch.

"Oh, you needn't apologize," shrugged Laura. "You'll probably raid your ice-box when you get home. I'm sure I would if I had one."

On the way upstairs they paused at the door of the long dim parlor. It was cold and forbidding. The one lighted jet of the chandelier glimmered feebly through its smoke-blackened globe.

"Nice cheerful place to receive company," commented Laura. "Mr. Tracy of the Circle Studio called last week and I'd no other place to take him. He stayed just fifteen minutes."

Again in the fourth-story back-hall bedroom, Laura produced a box of sweet crackers to supplement the dinner.

"They're nourishing and filling."

"Why don't you get a room and take your meals out?" anxioused Helen.

"I've tried that. But I don't eat regular—and it costs more. I'm going to stick it out here a while longer. Mr. Levy's putting on a big new serial and I may get a good part." Then bitterly, "And I may not."

"You've been very brave about it all," faltered Helen, with a sudden emotional appreciation of Laura's long struggle.

"Well, I've had to play the game," with a shrug. "Fate's dealt me some pretty rotten cards. If I don't get in this serial—" She paused, her gaze fixed out the snow-blurred window.

"I'm going to believe that you will," encouraged Helen. "I know things do come—if we will and believe hard enough."

"Oh, I haven't much faith in that," morosely. "Nothing ever comes to me."

But later, when she walked part way home with Helen through the spitting snow, she brought up the subject again with a half wistful, half laughing,

"Don't forget to 'believe' that I'll get that serial job. I'll be pretty blue if I don't."

"Oh, you will—I know you will!"

But a moment later, hurrying on alone, Helen's philosophy failed her. She felt powerless against the persistent ill-luck that had so long pursued Laura.

Again the old tumultuous rebellion at the injustice of fate assailed her. Why should merit and perseverance so often fail to win out?

Why should Laura, who was so fine and brave, be condemned to repeated failure, while others less worthy, with less industry and less ability, were swept on by successive waves of good fortune?

His Reason.

"Weatherstrip Jones," said the recorder. "What an odd name for a baby. Why did you call him that?"

"Because the youngster kept me out of the draft," responded the proud father.—[Boston Transcript.

Annie Black---She was White All Through

BY REX BEACH.

THE storm broke at Salmon Lake, and we ran for Slisco's roadhouse. It whipped out from the mountains, all torn into strips coming through the saw-teeth, lashing us off the glare ice and driving us up against the river banks among the willows. Cold? Well, some! My bottle of painkiller froze slushy, like lemon punch.

There's nothing like a warm shack, with a cache full of grub, when the peaks smoke and the black snow-clouds roar down the gulch.

Other "mushers" were ahead of us at the roadhouse, freighters from Kougarok, an outfit from Teller going after booze, the mail carrier, and, who do you reckon?—Annie Black. First time I had seen her since she was run out of Dawson for claim jumping.

Her and me hadn't been essential to one another since I won that suit over a water right on Eldorado.

"Hello, Annie," says I, clawing the ice out of my whiskers; "finding plenty of claims down here to relocate?"

"Shut up, you perjured pup," says she, full of disappointing affabilities; "I don't want any dealings with a lying, thieving hypocrite like you, Billy Joyce."

Annie lacks the sporting instinct; she ain't got the disposition for cup-racing. Never knew her to win a case, and yet she's the instigatress of more emotional activities than all the marked cards and home distilled liquor in Alaska.

"See here," says I, "a prairie dog and a rattler can't hole up together, but humans has got to be congenial, so, seein' as we're all stuck to live in the same room till this blizzard blizzes out, let's forget our troubles. I'm as game a Hibernian as the next, but I don't hibernate till there's a blaze of mutual respect going."

"Blaze away," says she, "though I leave it to the crowd if you don't look and act like a liar and a grave robber." Her speech is sure full of artless hostilities.

Ain't ever seen her? Lord! I thought everybody knew Annie Black. She drifted into camp one day, tall, slab-sided, ornery to the view, and raising fifty or upwards; disposition uncertain as frozen dynamite. Her ground plans and elevations looked like she was laid out for a man, but the specifications hadn't been follered. We ain't consumed by curiosity regarding the etymology of every stranger that drifts in, and as long as he totes his own pack, does his assessments, and writes his location notices proper, it goes. Leastways, it went till she hit town. In a month she had the brotherly love of that camp gritting its teeth and throwing back twisters. 'Twas all legitimate, too, and there never was a pennyweight of scandal connected with her name. No, sir! Far's conduct goes, she's always been the shinin' female example of this country; but them qualities let her out.

First move was to jump Bat Ruggles's town lot. He had four courses of logs laid for a cabin when "Scotty" Bell came in from the hills with $1800 in coarse gold that he's rocked out of a prospect shaft on Bat's Moose's Creek claim.

Naturally Bat made general proclamation of thirst, and our town kinder dozed violently into a joyful three days' reverie, during which period of coma the recording time on Bat's lot ran out.

He returns from his "hootch-hunt" to complete the shack, and finds Annie overseeing some "Siwashes" put a pole roof on it. Of course, he promotes a race-war immediate, playing the white "open" and the red to lose, so to speak, when she up and spanks his face, addressing expurgated, motherly cuss-words at him like he'd been a bad boy and swallered his spoon, or dug an eye out of the kitten. Bat realizes he's against a strange system and draws out of the game.

A week later she jumps No. 3, Gold Bottom, because Donnelly stuck a pick in his foot and couldn't stay to finish the assessment.

"I can't throw her off, or shoot her up," says he, "or even cuss at her like I want to, 'cause she's a lady." And it appeared like that'd been her graft ever since—presumin' on her sex to make disturbances. In six months we hated her like pisen.

There wasn't a stampede in a hundred miles where her bloomers wasn't leading, for she had the endurance of a moose; and between excitements she prospected for trouble in the manner of relocations.

I've heard of fellers speakin' disrespectful to her and then wandering around in a daze and loco after she'd got through painting word pictures of 'em. It goes without saying she was generally popular and petted, and when the commissioner invited her to duck out down the river, the community sighed, turned over, and had a peaceful rest—first one since she'd come in.

I hadn't seen her from that time till I blowed into Slisco's on the bosom of this forty mile, forty below blizzard.

Setting around the fire that night I found that she'd just lost another of her famous lawsuits—claimed she owned a fraction 'longside of No. 20, Buster Creek, and that the Lund boys had changed their stakes so as to take in her ground. During the winter they'd opened up a hundred and fifty feet of awful rich pay right next to her line, and she'd raised the devil. Injunctions, hearings and appeals, and now she was coming back, swearing she'd been "jobbed," the judge had been bought, and the jury corrupted.

"It's the richest strike in the district," says she. "They've rocked out $11,000 since snow flew, and there's 30,000 buckets of dirt on the dump. They can bribe and bulldoze a decision through this court, but I'll have that fraction yet, the robbers."

"Robbers be cussed," speaks up the mail man. "You're the cause of the trouble yourself. If you don't get a square deal, it's your own fault—always looking for technicalities in the mining laws. It's been your game from the start to take advantage of your skirts, what there is of 'em, and jump, jump, jump. Nobody believes half you say. You're a natural disturber, and if you was a man you'd have been hung long ago."

I've heard her oral formations, and I looked for his epidermis to shrivel when she got her replications focused. She just soared up and busted.

"Look out for the stick," thinks I.

"Woman, am I," she says, musical as a bum gramophone under the slow bell. "I take advantage of my skirts, do I? Who are you, you mangy 'malamoot,' to criticise a lady? I'm more of a man than you, you tinhorn; I want no favors; I do a man's work; I live a man's life; I am a man, and I'm proud of it, but you—; Nome's full of your kind; you need a woman to support you; you're a protoplasm, a polyp. Those Swedes changed their stakes to cover my fraction. I know it, they know it, and if it wasn't Alaska, God would know it, but He won't be in again till spring, and then the season's only three months long. I've worked like a man, suffered like a man—"

"Why don't ye' lose like a man?" says he.

"I will, and I'll fight like one, too," says she, while her eyes burned like faggots. "They've torn away the reward of years of work and agony, and they forget I can hate like a man."

She was stretched up to high C, where her voice drowned the howl of the storm, and her seamed old face was a sight. I've seen mild, shrinky, mouse-shy women 'roused to hell's own fury, and I felt that night that here was a bad enemy for the Swedes of Buster Creek.

She stopped, listening.

"What's that? There's some one at the door."

"Nonsense," says one of the freighters. "You do so much knocking you can hear the echo."

"There's some one at the door," says she.

"If there was, they'd come in," says Joe.

"Couldnt be, this late in this storm," I adds.

She came from behind the stove, and we let her go to the door alone. Nobody ever seemed to do any favors for Annie Black.

"She'll be seein' things next," says Joe, winking. "What'd I tell you? For God's sake close—you'll freeze us."

Annie opened the door, and was bid to the waist in a cloud of steam that rolled in out of the blackness. She peered out for a minute, stooped, and tugged at something in the dark. I was at her side in a jump, and we dragged him in, snow-covered and senseless.

"Quick—brandy," says she, slashing at his stiff "mukluks." "Joe, bring in a tub of snow." Her voice was steel sharp.

"Well, I'm danged," says the mail man. "It's only an Injun. You needn't go cracy like he was a white."

"Oh, you fool," says Annie. "Can't you see? Esquimaux don't travel alone. There's white men behind, and God help them if we don't bring him to."

She knew more about resusitations than us, and we did what she said, till at last he came out of it, groaning—just plumb wore out and numb.

"Talk to him, Joe; you savvy their noise," says I.

The poor devil showed his excitement, dead as he was.

"There's two men on the big 'Cut-off,'" Joe translates. "Lost on the portage. There was only one robe between 'em, so they rolled up in it, and the boy came on in the dark. Says they can't last till morning."

"That let's them out," says the mail carrier. "Too bad we can't reach them tonight."

"What!" snaps Annie, "Reach 'em? Huh! I said you were a jellyfish. Hurry up and get your things on, boys."

"Have a little sense," says Joe. "You surely ain't a darn fool. Out in this storm, dark as the inside of a cow; blowin' forty mile, and the 'quick' froze. Can't be done. I wonder who they are?"

He "kowtowed" some more, and at the answer of the chattering savage we looked at Annie.

"Him called Lund," shivered the Siwash.

I never see anybody harder hit than her. I love a scrap, but I thinks "Billy, she's having a stiffer fight than you ever associated with."

Finally she says, kind of slow and quiet: "Who knows where the 'Cut-off' starts?"

Nobody answers, and up speaks the U. S. man again.

"You've got your nerve, to ask a man out on such a night."

"If there was one here, I wouldn't have to ask him. Here's people freezing within five miles of here, any you hug the stove, saying: 'It's stormy, and we'll get cold.' Of course it is. If it wasn't stormy they'd be here, too, and it's so cold, you'll probably freeze. What's that got to do with it? Ever have your mother talk to you about duty? Thank Heaven I traveled that portage once, and I can find it again if somebody will go with me."

'Twas a blush raising talk, but nobody upset any furniture getting dressed.

She continues:

"So I'm the woman of this crowd and I hide behind my skirts. Mr. Mail Man, show what a glorious creature you are. Throw yourself—get up and stretch and roar. Oh, you barnyard bantam! Has it had its pap tonight? I've a grand commercial enterprise; I'll take all of your bust measurements and send out to the States for a line of corsets. Ain't there half a man among you?"

She continued in this vein, pollutin' the air, and, having no means of defense, we found ourselves follerin' her out into a yelling storm that beat and roared over us like waves of flame.

Swede luck had guided their shaft onto the richest pay-streak in seven districts, and Swede luck now led us to the Lund boys, curled up in the drifted snow beside their dogs; but it was the level head and cool judgment of a woman that steered us home in the gray whirl of the dawn.

During the deathly weariness of that night, I saw past the calloused hide of that woman and sighted the splendid courage cached away beneath her bitter oratory and hostile syllogisms. "There's a story there," thinks I, "an' maybe a man moved in it—though I can't imagine her softened by much affection." It pleased some guy to state that woman's the cause of all our troubles, but I figger they're like whisky—all good, though of course, some a heap better'n other, and when a frail, little ninety pound woman gets to bucking and acting bad, there's generally a two hundred pound man hid out in the brush that put the burr under the saddle.

During the next three days she dressed the wounds of them Scow-weegians and nursed them as tender as a mother.

The wind hadn't died away till along came the "Flying Dutchman" from Dugan's, twenty miles up, floatin' on the skirts of the blizzard.

"Hello, fellers. Howdy, Annie. What's the matter here?" says he. "We had a woman at Dugan's, too—upurty as a picture; different from the Nome bunch—real sort of a lady."

"Who is she?" says I. "An' what's she doin' out here on the trail?"

"Dunno, but she's all right; come clean from Dawson with a dog team; says she's looking for her mother."

I heard a pan clatter on the floor where Annie was washing dishes, and her face went a sickly gray. She leaned across, gripping the table and straining to ask something, but the words wouldn't come, while "Dutch" continues:

"Somethin' strange about it, I think. She says her ma's over in the Golden Gate district, workin' a rich mine. Of course, we all laughed at her, and said there wasn't a woman in the whole layout, 'ceptin' some folks might miscontrue Annie here into a kind of female. She stuck to it though, much as to say we was liars. She's comin' on—what's the matter, Annie—you ain't sore at me affeminatin' you by the gentle name of female, are you?"

She had come to him, and gripped his shoulder, till her long, bony fingers buried themselves in his mackinaw. Her mouth was twitching, and she hadn't got shed of that "first-aid-to-the-injured" look.

"What name? What name, Dutch? What name?" She shook him like a rat.

"Bradshaw—but you needn't run your nails through and clinch 'em. Oy! Le' go my white meat. You can act like she was your long lost baby. What d'ye think of that idea, fellers? Ain't that a pleasin' conceit? Annie Black, and a baby. Ha! Ha! that's a hit. Annie and a daughter. A cowthief and a calla lily."

"Dutch," says I, "you ain't a-goin' to make it through to Lane's Landing if you don't pull your freight," and I drags the darn fool out and starts him off.

When I came in she was huddled onto a goods box, shaking and sobbing like any woman, while the boys sat around and champed their bits and stomped.

"Take me away, Billy," she says. "For God's sake take me away before she sees me." She slid down to the floor and cried something awful. Gents, that was sure the real distress, nothing soft and sloppy, but hard, wrenchy, deep ones, like you hear at a melodrama. 'Twas only back in '99 that I seen an awful crying match, though both of the ladies had been drinking, so I felt like I was useder to emotion than the balance of the boys, and it was up to me to take a holt.

"Madam," says I, and somehow the word didn't seem out of place any more—"Madam, why do you want to avoid this party?"

"Take me away," she says. "It's my daughter. She's going to find me this way, all rough and immodest and made fun of. But that's the worst you can say, isn't it? I'm a square woman—you know I am, don't you, boys?" and she looked at us fierce and pleadin'.

"Sure," says Joe. "We'll boost you with the girl all right."

"She think's her father's dead, but he isn't—he ran away with a show woman—a year after we were married. I never told her about it, and I've tried to make a little lady of her."

We found out afterwards that she had put the girl in a boarding-school, but couldn't seem to make enough for both of them, and when the Klondyke was struck thought she saw a chance. She came north, insulted by deck hands and laughed at by the officers. At Skagway she nursed a man through typhoid, and when he could walk he robbed her. The mounted police over there took everything else she had and mocked at her. "Your kind always has money," they said.

That's how it had been everywhere, and that's why she was so hard and bitter. She'd worked and fought like a man, but she'd suffered like a woman.

"I've lied and starved and stolen for her," said Annie, "to make her think I was doing well. She said she was coming in to me, but I knew winter would catch her at Dawson, and I thought I could head her off by spring.

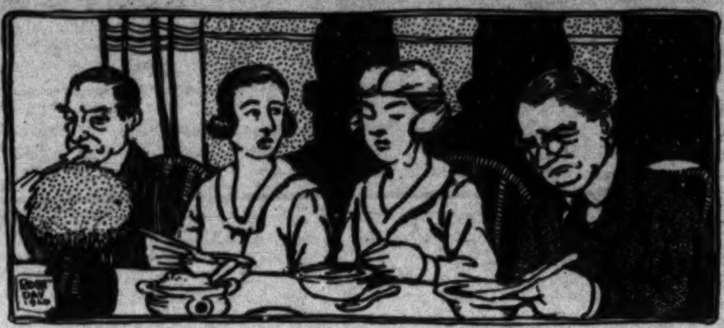
"Now, she's here; but, men, as your mothers loved you, save me from my little girl."

She buried her face, and when I looked at the boys, tears stood in Joe Slisco's eyes and the others breathed hard. Ole Lund, him that was froze worst about the hands, spoke up:

The Married Life of Helen and Warren.

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER.

Helen has an Intimate Glimpse Into the Dreariness of Boarding-house Life.



"WAIT, I'll light the gas."

Helen, breathless from the three flights, stood in the dark while Laura groped for matches and lit the solitary gas-jet of her shabby hallroom.

"No clean towels—and she didn't change the bed," glancing at the rumpled pillowcase. "And this is Saturday."

"You get clean linen on Saturday?" asked Helen, unused to boarding-house rules.

"We're supposed to. And the room cleaned, too—but look at that," running a disdainful finger over the dusty bureau.

"Isn't there any way to heat this room?" shivered Helen.

"There's an oil stove," indicating a small rusty heater behind the door. "But I can't endure the smell. I'd better wash up now—before somebody gets in the bathroom."

Taking a towel and soap dish from the windowsill, she hurried down the hall.

Left alone, Helen gazed about the cheerless room, dimly lit by the unshaded gas jet with its feeble blue-forked flame.

A staggering chest of drawers above which hung a cracked mirror, served for a bureau. A narrow iron bed, a tripod table, a straight chair, and a trunk crowded the remaining space.

Laura had utilized every inch of room. A faded red curtain bulged with clothes, and boxes piled the shelf above. A row of shoes toed from under the bed. A hand sewing-machine, a work basket, and magazines loaded the trunk.

To relieve Laura's loneliness, Helen often invited her to dinner; but tonight, Warren being out of town, she had yielded to her insistence that they dine at the boarding-house.

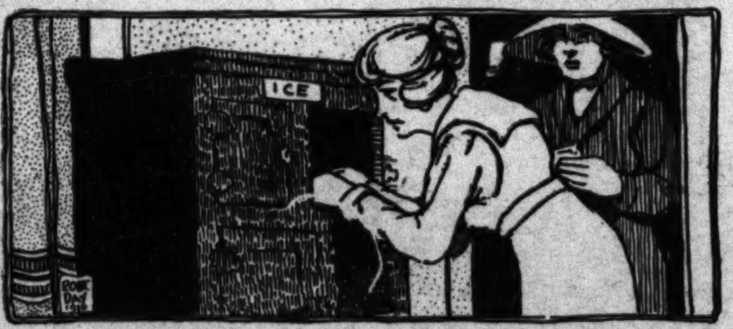
"Do you good—make you appreciate your home," had been Laura's argument.

"No hot water!" returning from the bathroom and replacing her towel and soap.

While she combed her hair and freshened up for dinner, she gave Helen gossipy bits of information about the other boarders.

"I want you to notice the woman opposite me at the table. She's in the pictures—regular work at $40 a week. And I," bitterly, "I'm lucky if I average three days at five per."

Helen refrained from commenting upon this remark. She had learned the futility of advising Laura against this uncertain, poorly-paid motion picture work, to which she was constantly returning.



She was a capable stenographer, and periodically, when down and out, she would take an office position. But only to save up enough money to tide her over another few months. Then the call of the camera would lure her back. No discouragement seemed to quell the hope of a screen success.

At rare intervals, she would get a small part in a feature that would mean regular work for a time, but mostly she was only an "extra," waiting around the studios for any chance assignment.

For almost four years she had been struggling for a foothold in a profession that continued callously unresponsive to all her efforts.

"There's the bell!" as a clanging clatter from below.

"Shall I keep my hat on?"

"If you'd rather—anything goes here. If you appeared in pink fleshlings—nobody'd give you a second glance. Ready?" turning the gas to a bead.

They made their way down the four dingy, linoleumed flights to the odoriferous basement dining-room. One long center table and a small one in the bay window filled the room.

"This is Mr. Parker's seat," Laura drew out a chair, "but you can sit here. He's good-natured—he'll find another place."

With absorbing interest Helen watched the boarders as they straggled in. Her swift inventories were augmented by Laura's whispered comments. There was both pathos and comedy in her brief summaries.

"That's Miss Newman—a clerk at Simon & Greenburg's," as a tired-looking woman of about 35 took her place at the long table. "She supports a paralytic brother on her fifteen a week."

"Miss Hacket's next to her—a bookkeeper—crazy about spiritualism. The stout one's Mrs. Klein—the star boarder. Has the second story front. A little money and doesn't have to work."

"Which is the landlady?" asked Helen.

"Doesn't come down for dinner. Has it in her room—the back parlor. She wears rusty black satin with jet. Red hair—I'm sure it's a wig. Used to be in vaudeville. She'd be pathetic if she weren't so close.

"That's Miss Morris just coming in—a manicurist. And that's Miss Bower at the end. She's in a smart dressmaking place—just drapes skirts."

"Who's that refined-looking woman in black—with the gray hair?"

"A Mrs. Rankin—a widow from Georgia. She's trying to get a position, but she's had no experience. I'm afraid she'll have a hard time—they all do at that age." Then as another elderly woman entered. "She's a kindergarten teacher. It's a regular old ladies' home."

Helen glanced at Laura with her assurance of youth and beauty. How many years would it last? How long before she would be one of those drab middle-aged boarders?

"Never!" divining her thoughts. "If I haven't made some success before I'm 30—well, you can always turn on the gas."

"Roast beef or roast mutton?" asked the slatternly colored waitress at Helen's elbow.

"Roast beef," Laura answered for her. "And, Cora, do try to get it rare." Then to Helen, "The mutton's awful."

Absorbed in watching the boarders, Helen reluctantly turned her attention to the thin vegetable soup, covertly wiping the spoon on her napkin.

"Oh, you can do that openly," laughed Laura. "We all polish our tools."

"She's rented the third story front," announced the dressmaker. "A couple—they're coming Monday."

"Hurrah! Maybe we'll have some fresh vegetables. We're pretty well fed up with canned corn."

"Don't tell me we have it again tonight!"

Evidently canned corn was a staple, for when Cora placed before Helen an over-done shaving of gristly roast beef, she slammed down with it a bird bath-tub of pallid corn and another of grayish mashed potatoes.

The discussion of the third story front became general. It had been vacant several weeks and there were lively speculations as to the new tenants.

"Well, let's hope they won't jump their bill. She's holding Mrs. Robert's trunk—and taking it out on us by cutting down the chow."

"Have some mustard," advised Laura. "You have to season things here."

A glance at the mustard jar with its smeary blackened rim decided Helen against that condiment. Instead she disguised the dubious flavor of the roast beef with a generous sprinkling of salt and pepper.

The canned corn was about the best of the meal. The potatoes were lumpy and cold, the corn bread strong with soda, and the sliver of deeply tinted butter was not a dairy product.

Most every one took coffee with their dinner—large thick cups of chicory which they diluted with bluish milk.

The "salad" consisted of three wilted lettuce leaves and a rancid oil dressing.

Y MARIAN COPELY.

THE big motor stage chugged around the last sharp curves, charged the steep grade ahead, and topping it on high gear, much to the chauffeur's satisfaction, came to a stop in front of the low, rambling bungalow hotel at the camp, which spread out at the head of the canyon.

Among the half dozen passengers was a young woman of marked distinction in style and bearing. Her face was a study. Every line and feature expressed supreme boredom, world weariness, cold indifference to her fellow passengers. The other occupants of the stage were hot, dusty, and travel stained, but she was trim and spotless in her white linen dress and dark traveling hat. She was one of those persons who always seem to have just stepped out of a hat box, leaving the tissue paper wrapping fresh and unrumpled. Now she did not look at all as though she had just finished a long trip, including a tiresome ride on the train, followed by the seemingly interminable climb up the steep and winding trail through clouds of powdery midsummer dust.

During the long trip she had more than once wished herself elsewhere, and at her first glimpse of the camp hotel, with the shabby tents clustered about it, and carelessly dressed people loafing everywhere—on chairs and benches under the great pine trees, in hammocks swung on the very edge of the mountain stream over which the hotel veranda projected, or in groups on the tiny patch of lawn in front—she devoutly wished she had been less democratic in her choice of a place in which to spend her vacation.

She was a San Francisco school-teacher who from her earliest girlhood ahd been possessed with the overweening desire for wealth and social position. A member of one of the most distinguished families of the State, she had, nevertheless, been obliged to struggle all her life for everything she got out of it, for her father was a ne'er-do-well who had never taken any responsibility for the good old-fashioned family he had brought into the world. Katherine, ambitious and energetic, had helped one after another of her brothers and sisters to establish themselves, and finally, when a few years before she had seen her youngest sister married to a wealthy San Francisco politician, she had begun to realize that she herself was the only member of the family who seemed to have no future.

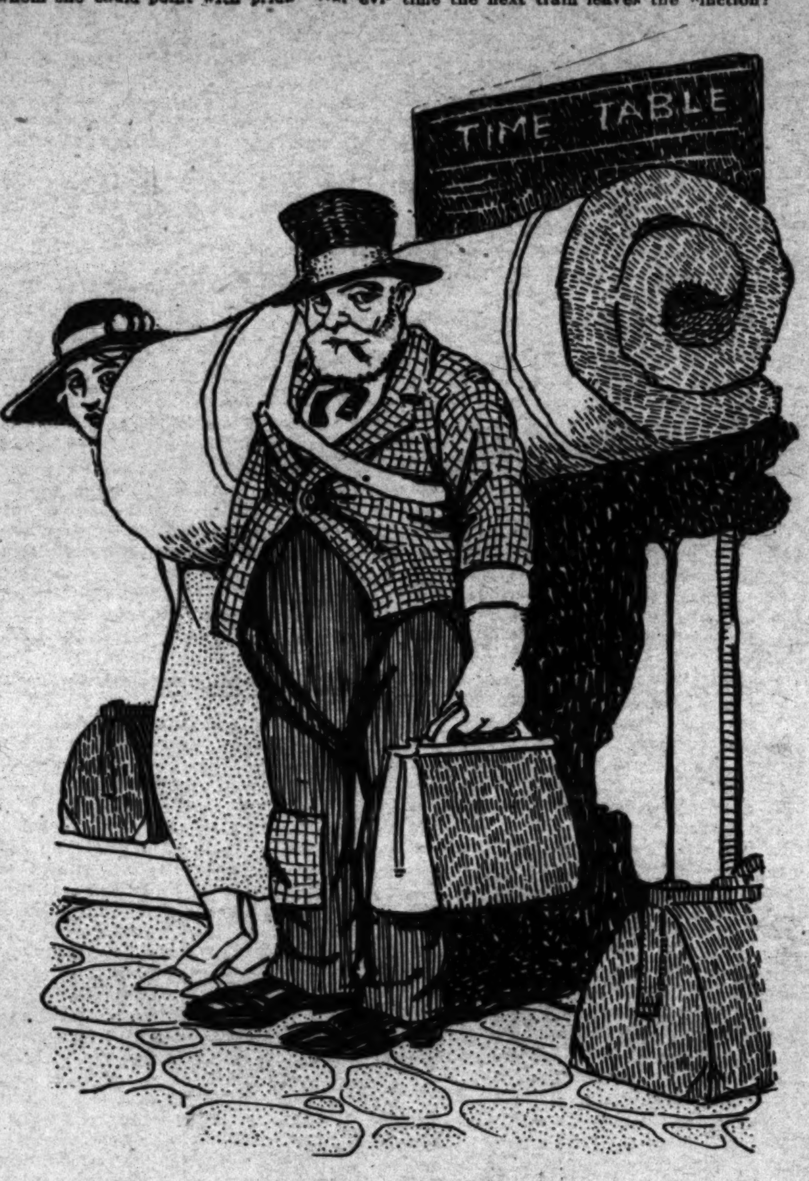
This last winter there had been a suave and portly judge who had showered attentions upon her, only to veer off suddenly and marry a bejeweled widow who had long lain in wait for him. This had been the end for Katherine. Such a revulsion of feeling had taken possession of her that she had definitely renounced her long cherished ambition to make a brilliant marriage, for she had lost faith in men and could not again bring herself to make the effort to be attractive and interesting. It was all too cheap, too transparent, too useless.

But the very morning after her arrival, as Katherine lay stretched out indolently on a great gray boulder overhanging the purling waters of the mountain stream, she saw through half-closed eyes David Craig approach. She had met him at dinner the evening before, but had felt no interest in him, though she knew him to be a leading lawyer of an adjoining State, a man of wealth and a bachelor. In her weary soul she felt antagonistic to all eligible men of 30 or 40. She was through with them.

Now she gave no sign of recognition, but wearily closed her eyes, though she knew Craig had seen her glance at him. Nothing daunted, Craig composedly surveyed the scene and then seated himself on a near-by ledge of rock a few yards away. When Katherine opened her eyes, they met his friendly gaze and quite without intention she returned his smiling greeting. Then they launched into a lazy conversation, with long lapses during which Katherine lay contentedly looking up at the gentian-blue sky flecked here and there with clouds of pearl, or abstractedly watched the little stream which never for a moment gave up the effort to undermine the boulder on which she lay. When the luncheon bell sounded in the distance, she and Craig took the path along the stream instead of the short cut by the road and arrived late and lunched together in the best of spirits.

That was the beginning of a close intimacy between Katherine and Craig, an intimacy that caused her to forget her bitterness and to take a new interest in men and things.

Craig found her well informed, responsive and witty, and though he sometimes thought her a little hard and decidedly sophisticated, he nevertheless enjoyed the jaunts they took together during his hours of relaxation. She did not fail to tell him of her young brother who was already a member of the Legislature, of her cousin who was a judge of the State Supreme Sourt, of the brother-in-law who was a San Francisco politician and of the various other family connections to whom she could point with pride. Her evident family pride first amused and then annoyed him, but she was so steeped in it as to be unconscious of its effect.



Packed Him Off Bag and Baggage.

He talked to her of an important case he was ruminating over, of his long struggle to attain success, and on more than one occasion became enthusiastic over the things he hoped to accomplish. She marveled to find him an optimist, a sincere and honest enthusiast of quite a different type from the politicians of her acquaintance. His boyish frankness, his faith in the future, and his genuine democracy appealed to something big and fine in her, something that in the sordid struggle of her life had never before been awakened. She felt that he was the biggest man she had ever known, but quite contrary to her usual custom she made no effort to vamp him. One afternoon she was on the veranda awaiting Craig, with whom she was to go on a climbing expedition. Her pleasant thoughts were interrupted by the appearance of the porter, who thrust a yellow envelope at her with the explanation, "Night letter, miss."

With the perturbation a woman usually feels over a telegram, she opened it and read:

"Miss Katherine Beloit,

"Salter Springs, Cal.

"Come home immediately. Father gone to poorhouse. Refuses to budge. Papers haven't it yet.

"CHARLES BELOIT."

For a few moments Miss Beloit sat as though dazed. "The old scamp!" she said half aloud, and then started up from her chair, looking around to see if anyone had overheard her.

At this moment Craig appeared. She hurried to meet him.

"I'm so sorry," she explained. "I can't go. I've just had a telegram and I must go home at once."

"Somebody sick?"

"No—yes. Father. Will you see what time the next train leaves the junction?"

"Why, you know the stage left over an hour ago to meet the 5 o'clock train and there is no other until morning."

"What time is it now?" And then, without giving him time to answer, she continued, "It's only 3 o'clock. I must catch that train."

"All right," he answered quickly. "You go and pack and I'll get a machine somewhere and get you to the train on time. How long before you will be ready?"

"I can pack in no time—in ten minutes," she answered, and was as good as her word.

But a machine was not to be had and so they were obliged to trust to a horse and cart, leaving her trunk to be sent later. Katherine never forgot that wild drive to the little station at the foot of the canyon. It was down a steep grade, over a rough road, buried deep with dust. She despaired of ever making it in time. But they did, and Craig lifted her into the last car and threw her bag after her as the train steamed out.

"Good-by, I hope your father will be better," he called after the bag, and then turned to care for his foam-bespattered horse.

As soon as Katherine recovered her breath she wrote a telegram to be sent to her brother from the next station, asking him to meet her train at the junction the next day and go with her for her father. Her father!

She understood his diabolic disposition too well to be surprised at its latest manifestation. Crossed in some way by her mother, the old rascal had devised this plan to annoy and humiliate his wife and his unloving offspring. His daughter trembled with anger and anxiety. If this should ever get out, she felt that she could not face those San Francisco friends to whom she had always put on airs anent her family. And David Craig—she refused to think of him.

When her train arrived at the junction and Katherine alighted, she neither looked nor felt like the well-groomed young woman who had radiated satisfaction on the hotel veranda the day before. A telegram from her brother awaited her. He could not possibly meet her at the junction, as he had been called to San Francisco upon important business. He was very sorry but was sure that she could manage father.

And she managed him, and did it in record time. After a two-hours' wait at the junction, she took the accommodation train to the town sixteen miles away where the poor farm was located. Once face to face with her father, whom she found basking in the sun and expatiating to the assembled paupers upon the ingratitude of his children, she made short work of him.

"See here, father! What do you mean? I want you to come home with me at once!" she blazed, and the old degenerate quailed before her.

"But," he whined, "your mother took away my feather bed."

"I'll see about all that when we get home. You come now," she answered in a tone not to be disregarded.

But even Katherine Beloit's resolute will could not force her father to come without due time spent in packing, in which he received the not too gentle assistance of his irate daughter. He had provided himself with a carpet bag which Katherine remembered having been stowed in the attic since her childhood. Although she gnashed her teeth at the thought of being seen with that heirloom, she had to submit, but when the old varlet took the feather tick from off the bed he had occupied and began, with much groaning and wheezing, to roll it up, she gasped in horror.

"Why, father, what are you doing? You are not going to take that?"

"It goes where I do," he leered back at her, and she read in his eyes that dogged stubbornness which had enabled him to withstand all the protests of his family and friends for many years. Not daring to risk her authority too far, she was obliged to curb her anger and allow him to take the feather bed, consoling herself with the thought that it would be dark when they reached home.

At 6 o'clock she was back at the junction, waiting on the platform for the train that was to take her and her captive home.

Her father stood beside her, clinging to her arm, and an odd couple they made.

Along with the carpet bag her father had resurrected an old homespun suit from the attic and his diabolic fancy had caused him to don this. The forty years during which he had been taking the rest cure had about doubled his girth, so he had found it impossible to wear the trousers of the suit, and had substituted a pair of drab trousers adorned with a huge patch. The tailed coat lacked several inches of meeting in front, and the sleeves bound his arms so that it was with difficulty that he could move them. Upon his head he wore a battered silk hat which added just the touch needed to make him altogether ridiculous. The fastidious Kateherine thought as she looked at him that the carpet bag and the feather bed did not matter; nothing could make the picture more ridiculous.

Just when her impatience at the nonarrival of the train had reached its height, she heard a whistle and then saw a train approaching.

"That's not your train, miss," said the agent, as he saw her step forward. "That's the northern express. Yours will be along on this other track in less than five minutes now."

"That is the train I would have had to take if I had missed the 5 o'clock yesterday," she reflected as the express stopped, and then she gasped and prayed for death, for alighting from the express she saw a handsome, well-dressed man with shaggy black hair and keen gray eyes.

"Maybe he will not see me," she gasped to herself. Then quick as thought she Larry, Press Agent.

They talked until late, fashioning, fitting and cutting until, at the close, she cried:

"Why, we've made a real best-seller out of it! You've been a godsend to me, Larry. Now if you will please to call Mrs. Marley—"

But he carried her in, that evening, and for several evenings afterward.

Starting at this point in Miss Barbara's life, the pendulum of her existence that had been swinging so perilously near to a stop, of a sudden seemed to receive some mysterious impetus. It was her physician, Dr. MacNair, who first noticed the change in her condition, though, with characteristic Scotch taciturnity, he refrained from telling her of his observation. The fever with which she had been so long tormented, gradually abated and, almost imperceptibly, she began to take on weight. Apprehensive of some new prank of the malady, MacNair gave her his undivided attention, in the meanwhile carrying on a furtive investigation of the events of the past few days that might or might not have effected the phenomenon. In the end he appeared to be quite satisfied. There was a chance for her recovery, he told himself—just a chance.

But Miss Barbara had had no intimation of this new turn for the better. When Larry spoke vaguely of bringing Lamonte around, some evening, she let him understand by her tactful silence that she would prefer not to meet him. Finally she came out with touching naivete and told Larry her true reason.

"If, by any chance, we should fall in love with each other, just think, Larry, how hard it would make things for poor Lamonte after—after—" her voice failed her for a moment. "You must understand, don't you?" she inquired gently.

Larry perfectly understood. Worse yet, he thought, since he, himself, had long ago fallen in love with her.

It was a few mornings after that he told her of Lamonte's final preparations for his exhibition tour. He had been withholding this knowledge for a week since, merely laying a few gentle suggestions to act as buffers for the announcement, believing that she was daily weakening.

"But he has decided not to start at once," he said. "We thought we might stay here until you had gotten your manuscript in shape for the publishers. Possibly I—we—could be of assistance to you in the matter of dealing with them."

"I understand, Larry," she said quietly, perceiving his downcast look. "You and Mr. Lamonte have been so kind to me that I can never hope to repay you." Her eyes glistened, then blurred, though her voice remained steady enough. He was poignantly aware that she had laid hold of his rough coat sleeve and he ground his teeth and sat still. "You know, I've never once given thought as to its publication. I wrote it for—just because I had to, I suppose."

That night Larry slept not at all. Torn between doubt, desire and a miserable desolation, he went out next morning, leaving a note under Barbara's door.

"I must not tell her!" he gritted fiercely to himself as he strode along the street. "It's not me she loves, but the other—Lamonte."

His note read: "Dear Barbara: Lamonte will perform for you—just you—today at the usual time. There will be no other audience, as far as he is concerned. Larry."

Miss Barbara read it over severtl times.

"Larry—press agent," she murmured. "Two bonnie men. Two lovers, Larry, and I can't seem to choose."

She wept for a long time. Very weak and sick and lonely was little Miss Barbara.

. . . .

The silence of dusk had fallen when they carried her out on the balcony, Mrs. Marley and Bud. The clouds had banked up behind the Santa Felix Mountains, in the west, blue-black, orange-shot by the rays of the late sun, and weird. A narrow strip of green, dotted by a row of tiny white hangars, was all that was visible of the vast amphitheater where lay the aviation grounds—the stage for the drama to be enacted.

They were wheeling out Lamonte's big monoplane.

For a moment it stood silent, then, with a deep-toned drone, it fled across the field like a white gull and took the air. Slowly it circled, gathering speed, spiraling up and up magnificently until it appeared a white dot against the dark sky. For a moment it poised, then dipped easily and headed straight east, flying low and fast.

The girl on the balcony slowly waved her handkerchief as the flyer passed over her. Lamonte dipped again, turned and bounded back over the field.

"He knows!" she cried, "Oh, he knows I'm watching!"

Gyrating on end, turning over and over, first backward then forward, diving, twisting, sliding and somersaulting; dropping appalling distances down invisible lanes and ever spiraling back again as though disdaining lower heights, the aviator plainly knew no fear. She was left breathless, yet her eyes were trained upon that tiny white toylike creation that was gamboling so madly up there against the murky cloud banks.

With a final series of dazzling feats, terminated by a fearful drop which ended with a scornful flirt of the machine's tail within a few scant feet of the turf, Lamonte again drove upward, flopped over and flew for several moments up side down. At last he flopped over again and commenced his climb. Having reached what he apparently considered a sufficient height, he again poised as though trying to summon up something to add to his repertoire, then he moved deliberately out over the field and began the most astounding flying feat the world has ever seen. Dipping smartly, he wrote in the air, diving, twisting and falling, the great scrawling letters of the words

"I LOVE YOU."

With eyes straining upward, in terrified awe, with face drawn, and with hands clenching the balcony rail, Miss Barbara watched. At the close, when his machine turned and scudded away, she sank back in her chair and lay very white and still.

"Two bonnie men," she murmured drowsily. "Two bonnie men and—I think it is—Lamonte!"

. . . .

It was dusk when Larry came home. As he stepped to the curb from his machine he glanced upward at the balcony, smiling to himself. What a surprise he would give her when—

"Little duffer!" he muttered laughing.

He tiptoed up the stairs and out to their accustomed rendezvous. She was sitting motionless in her chair. Softly—ever so softly—he slipped out of his great coat and stood revealed—in the horizon blue uniform of the Escadrille, and a man, every inch! The girl stirred uneasily and raised her eyes.

"Larry!" she breathed.

"Are you surprised—after this afternoon?"

"N-no. But—but I didn't know, Larry, and I was so afraid for you."

He was on his knees, now, and his arms had gathered her close. Again there had come a great silence between them, a silence that pulsated vibrantly with the eloquence of itself. The air was heavy with the perfume of the roses. Downstairs old Prof. Gratz had launched into a wonderful sonata. At last she turned her lips to him for their first kiss.

"Do you still think your lover is Lamonte?" he whispered huskily.

"But yes! And what more lovable name could one ask for than Mrs. Larry Lamonte? Especially after a kind old doctor has told one that one's illness has been banished at the sound of that name. Oh, Larry! I am to get well, he tells me!"

After which, so Dame Rumor has it, there was business of a solitaire ring being slipped onto a very tiny finger, and a great stillness reigned over the little balcony.

Care of the Body.

crease of Japanese births. So the best way to meet the Japanese menace is to discourage white women from having babies.

"Dr. Pomeroy declared that most of the opposition would be from a certain religious body and from followers of such men as Brook. He attempted to show that there is no Medical Trust but plainly exposed the alarm of the M.D.'s when he added: 'That is what comes of having a man like Brook writing columns of such stuff in a newspaper with the circulation of the Los Angeles Times—meaning the growing opposition to drugs and carving.

"For my part, I say that all who follow the Care of the Body teachings thank the Creator for Dr. Brook. May you live many, many years, more, to spread the good work, and enjoy life."

To the above I add that Dr. Pomeroy is quite mistaken if he thinks that opposition to medical autocracy is confined to a "certain church" and a "man named Brook." It is a growing opposition throughout the United States, among all right-thinking people, against the pretensions of one school of medicine, that seeks to arrogate to itself control of all matters pertaining to the care of the body, and to do this with money wrung from the people.

Change of Climate.

TO MY consultants who ask me about a change of climate, I often write: "It will do you little good, so long as you carry your stomach, and your dietetic habits with you." Reginald Oswald, M.D., writes:

"There is a story of a Danish family, who had been plagued by a spook till they decided to leave their happy home for him, and actually shipped most of their household goods to new quarters, but on taking out the last load happened to see the goblin peep out of a blanket bundle and wave his hand with a cheery greeting: 'Vi fluedder idag?'—'We're moving today, ain't we?'

"That anecdote has often been quoted to quiz the vain endeavors of healthseekers, who travel from country to country, accompanied by the causes of their besetting disorders. The specter of their affliction follows them like their own shadow, and all they gain by their migration is the privilege of being haunted in ever new quarters. In their desperate attempts to shake off the incubus they often fairly gallop from health resort to health resort, but the ghost 'will not down.'"

The chief advantage of California climate is that it permits one to be in the open air all the year.

WILD BOAR HUNTING IN SOUTH SEAS.

BY CARL CLAUSEN.

WILD-BOAR hunting—"pig-sticking" as the English call it, is the sport of kings. In "pig-sticking," riding, racing, hunting and fighting are so happily blended that even an Irishman would be content with its glorious opportunities for sudden death.

To the mind of an English Colonial the shooting of a wild boar with a rifle is sacrilege—yes, cowardice. An eight foot spear and a wiry pony—nothing else, is considered proper and gentlemanly.

To kill an infuriated boar with a spear is infinitely more difficult, than with a rifle at a safe distance. Besides you give the boar a sporting chance to rip both yourself and your horse to pieces. An angry wounded boar can give you fifty wounds in five minutes, that'll take you an hour and five minutes to sew up and dress; and then again the beast after being run through may take it into his head to climb up the spear and fasten his tusks in your horse's chest.

The riding ground at Sangoon was hallowed ground. Hallowed by Resident Commissioner. The Resident was an ardent devotee of the sport. Besides, on Duralong his word was law—a certain distance inland. Sangoon came within this distance. Beyond this certain distance there was no law, or rather McCarty was too wise to try to enforce it. But at Sangoon there was a sergeant with twelve regulars and four machine guns.

When the Resident gave orders that no wild pig was to be shot within five miles of rideable ground, Sangoon obeyed the order partly because of the machine guns and partly because the Resident Commissioner's monthly hunt with his friends kept Sangoon supplied with fresh meat at regular intervals.

When we rode into the upland beyond the town shortly before noon, the beaters had already started. Half a score horsemen with spears resting in the hollow of their elbows were strung along the edge of the covert.

We were given spears and pulled our horses in line with the rest. The Resident Commissioner was directly ahead of us on his big roan mare. He waved his leather gauntlet at my companion and nodded silently to me.

Silently Waiting for the Boar to Appear.

NO ONE spoke. The assembled hunters sat their mounts like statues, waiting for the boar to break cover. A dozen spears flashed in the bright noonday sun. From the dense undergrowth to the right came the hoarse cries of the beaters.

Fifteen minutes passed. Twenty. Then out of the covert 300 yards distant, broke a giant boar. Simultaneously a dozen horses leaped into gallop.

The boar on hearing the sound of the galloping horses stopped in his tracks and wheeled about. For an instant he stood swinging his shaggy gray head at the approaching horsemen, glaring at them, angrily. Then, as the beaters emerged from the covert behind him, he sprang into a trot across the clearing with the horsemen at his heels.

The ground was good for a couple miles or so, and the boar was becoming fagged. The Resident on his roan mare was in front, spear ready for the first thrust. Directly ahead lay the stony upland—the approach to the Tulani Range—with gorges, ravines and difficult riding ground.

As the boar swerved to the right into a small gully, the Resident Commissioner, close upon his heels, flung his spear at him on an off chance to head him off. Throwing your spear at a boar is breaking the rules of the game, besides it is highly dangerous. If you succeed in wounding the animal, there's but one thing to do. Cut and run.

The Commissioner Paid Dearly for His Folly.

THE Resident Commissioner knew this too well; but chagrined at seeing his quarry escaping, he took the chance and immediately regretted it. The spear merely grazed the foreflank of the animal, wounding him slightly. With a growl of rage the boar whirled about and charged the oncoming horse. It happened so quickly that when the rest of the party came up, the Resident Commissioner was on the ground with his right thigh pierced by one of the boar's tusks. His horse was galloping across country with its entrails dragging over the ground. The boar was making off up the ravine swinging his dripping tusks, angrily.

The Resident Commissioner was game to the last.

"One of you stay with me," he called out. "The rest of you go get him."

My friend and I turned our Shetlands and dashed up the ravine after the boar.

Behind us came the rest of the party on a trot. It was dangerous ground for a horse. The bottom of the ravine was strewn with boulders and fallen timber. In the open country, my mount and my friend's had been at a disadvantage. Here they proved their value. After fifteen minutes of hard riding we had left the rest of the party far behind. The boar plunged into a narrow gorge to the right a short distance away.

When we turned the corner of the gorge, we saw the boar disappear among the boulders 300 yards ahead. Spurring our mounts we dashed after him.

For several minutes we pressed our winded ponies over the rough ground, then, without warning we found ourselves face to face with a perpendicular precipice. The gorge was a blind one.

We reined up our horses and looked at each other in amazement. The boar was nowhere to be seen.

The gorge was extremely narrow—not more than twenty feet wide with sheer perpendicular walls, and the floor was strewn with boulders and sharp stones. It was a very undesirable place to fight a battle to death with an infuriated boar, so we decided to retrace our steps and wait at the mouth of the gorge for the rest of the party to come up.

Sailors on a Holiday New to Pig-sticking.

BOTH my friend and myself were novices at pig-sticking. We were sailors on a vacation and had been invited to the Resident Commissioner's monthly hunt, because we happened to be on the ground. It was mighty fortunate for us that we carried our sheath knives as well as our spears. A sailor rarely strays far from tide-water without his sheath knife. Mine has helped me out of many a tight corner.

We had just made up our mind to leave the gorge as quickly as possible, when the boar came charging around the corner of a huge boulder. My friend, who was slightly ahead, called out a warning and flung his spear at the boar missing the animal completely. In less than five seconds horse and rider were on the ground. I tried to strike the boar with my spear but my horse was on his hind legs wild with fright. I was afraid of striking for fear of hitting my friend.

When a Knife Saved a Man from Death.

THE next moment I was thrown on the ground with my spear broken under me, and the boar charging. I had barely time to draw my sheath knife and rise to my knees when he struck. My knife had the edge of a razor and the point of a stiletto. I held it out in front of me at the charging boar, who literally impaled himself upon it. So terrific was his charging speed that my arm was buried to the elbow in his entrails. One of his tusks pierced the fleshy part of my arm.

When I got my bearings again and wiped the blood out of my eyes, I found my friend, sitting astraddle the dead boar wip- however. We had to kill my friend's pony. The little fellow was terribly wounded in the chest and abdomen. The boar's tusks had literally disemboweled him.

"They say it used to rain a good deal in France," remarked the man who stayed in this country to the man who went to France.

"It did, brother," answered the other. "It rained so much that—well, I never could see what all the fighting was about anyway. If that had been my country when the Kaiser came down in 1914, I would have handed it over gladly and begged his pardon for the condition it was in."—[American Legion Weekly.

Annie Black.

"Somebody tak de corner dat blanket an' blow may nose."

Then we heard voices outside.

"Hello, in there."

Annie stood up, clutching at her throat, and stepped behind the corner of the bunks as the door opened, framing the prettiest picture this old range rider ever saw.

'Twas a girl glowing pink and red where the cold had kissed her cheeks, with yellow curlicues of hair wandering out under her yarn cap. Her little fox-trimmed parka quit at the knees, showing the daintiest pair of —I can't say it. Anyhow, they wasn't, they just looked like 'em, only nicer.

She stood blinking at us, coming from the bright light outside, as cute as a new faro box—then:

"Can you tell me where Mrs. Bradshaw lives? She's somewhere in this district. I'm her daughter—come all the way from the States to see her."

When she smiled I could hear the heart-strings of those ragged whiskered, frost-bit "mushers" bustin' like banjo strings.

"You know her, don't you?" she says, turning to me.

"Know her, miss? Well, I should snort! There ain't a prospector on the range that ain't proud and honored to call her a friend. Leastways, if there is I'll bust his block," and I cast the bad eye on the boys to wise 'em up. "Ain't I right, Joe?"

"Betcher dam life," says Joe, sort of over-stepping the conventions.

"Then tell me where her claim is. It's quite rich, and you must know it," says she, appealing to him.

Up against it? Sure! I seen the whites of his eyes show like he was drowning, and he grinned joyful as a man kicked in the stummick.

"Er—er—I just bought in here, and I ain't acquainted much," says he. "Have a drink," and, in his confusion, he sets out the bottle alkalies that he dignifies by the alias of booze. Then he continues with reg'lar human intelligence.

"Bill, here, he can tell you where th ground is," and the whelp indicates me.

Lord knows my finish, but for Ole Lund. He sits up in his bunk, swaddled in Annie Black's bandages, and through slits between his frost bites, he moults the follering rhetoric:

"Aye tole you vere de claim iss. She own de Nomber Twenty fraction on Buster Creek, 'longside may and may broder. She's dam good fraction, too."

I consider that a blamed white stunt for Swedes; paying for their lives with the mine they swindled her out of.

Anyhow, it knocked us galley-west.

I'd formulated a swell climax, involving the discovery of the mother, when the mail man spoke up, him that had been her particular abomination, a queer kind of a break in his voice:

"Come out of that."

Mrs. Bradshaw moved out into the light, and, if I'm any judge, the joy that showed in her face rubbed away the bitterness of the past years. With an aching little cry the girl ran to her, and hid in her arms like a quail.

We men-folks got accumulated up into a dark corner where we shook hands and swore soft and insincere, and let our throats hurt, for all the world like it was Christmas or we'd got mail from home.

a national habit, the birth rate has decreased in the last fifty years. On the other hand, in countries like Bulgaria, Roumania and Serbia, where meat is not a national dietary, the birth rate is high and increasing."

'Healthy Disease Carriers."

A CHICAGO woman, who had never been sick, had been keeping boarders for years, to make a living. In the time she has kept boarders this woman had two who had typhoid. Through some malice of a boarder she was subjected to a "test" as "typhoid carrier." They claimed to find some "typhoid germs" in her system and she was forcibly taken away from her house and put into a place of confinement. Her clothes were taken from her and they tried to keep anyone from seeing her.

Remember, it is admitted that at any time perfectly harmless so-called germs of various diseases may be found in the throats of healthy persons, and consider for a moment what a boundless field for persecution this latest medical mania opens up. It is worse than the days of the Spanish Inquisition, when if you wished to get rid of a person, all you had to do was to inform on him as a heretic.

Leprosy.

A "SURE CURE" for leprosy is announced, from Hawaii. How often do we read of these "sure cures" for various diseases and the "cures" are never permanent. To cure, you must remove the cause.

Leprosy, like beri-beri, and scurvy, and many other diseases, is caused by a deficiency of mineral elements in the food. For instance, cocoanuts, and fish, and milk, and polished rice, are almost entirely lacking in iron.

Prize Fighting.

"I SEEN in the poipers," that on the anniversary of our Declaration of Independence, two eminent gentlemen are to pound each other, perhaps at Tia Juana, just across the line from San Diego, for the small matter of $500,000 or so.

Boxing is an excellent and useful exercise, and should be taught to all boys, but pugilism, like horse racing—and to some extent baseball—has become degenerated and commercialized.

Fifty years ago, in England, a couple of lusty youths would resort to a field, and in the presence of a few score invited guests, fight to a finish, for a purse of say twenty pounds, the loser perhaps getting a pot of beer. Nowadays, after millions of columns of newspaper publicity, they go through a dozen rounds—the result sometimes arranged in advance—for a king's ransom, both sharing the plunder—and then they star in the movies.

Doubtless, a large percentage of the population of Los Angeles will be "among those present," but the writer will beg to be excused.

Los Angeles cannot quite equal this, but a man would take little risk in making the offer for every year the sun does not shine here 350 days.

Drinking at Meals.

IN REGARD to drinking at meals, J. G. Stair, M.D., writes:

"This habit is almost universal. It is so general that to question its propriety and healthfulness occasions surprise and astonishment. Medical writers, with a few exceptions, do not condemn this common custom, but seek for facts and reasons to defend and commend it. Because it is so universal in all civilized countries it is argued that there is some reason which favors it. This deductive method of reasoning is not the method of science.

"Old habits are very hard to overcome, however harmful they may be proven to be. Ruin and disaster are seen with one's own eyes right ahead, yet the power of habit forces the victim to keep on in the old beaten path.

"The common habit of drinking iced tea, ice water, hot coffee, hot tea and other beverages with these extreme temperatures at meal time is without doubt a pernicious practice. An amateur in physiological knowledge knows that this habit will impair digestion and enfeeble the digestive organs.

"The cold drinks chill the stomach and delay digestion. Hot drinks relax the digestive tissues, and this excessive heat destroys the normal sensibility of these delicate organs and mucous surfaces.

"Advanced thinkers in hygiene and medicine condemn this habit as unhealthful and as fostering dyspepsia and disorders of the digestive organs."

To this I add that the "dry diet" has worked many cures. It is specially effective in overcoming constipation.

Seeking More Power.

FOLLOWING is from Mrs. Joe W. Keim of Los Angeless:

"I want to express my appreciation of the Care of the Body. I have read it every Sunday since I came to Los Angeles, and wish I had come sooner, for in these three years I have learned from you how to get well and keep well, which is a priceless thing to know. I sincerely thank you.

"Yesterday I heard Dr. Pomeroy, county health officer, deliver a lecture on his proposed 'Health Centers and Baby Bounty Bill' which he hopes to put through the next Legislature. The lecture was before the Legislative Council of Women's Clubs. It seems to me that this is just another subtle move of the medical fraternity to gain power over the people. He explained that the great of money must be given to the mothers through his 'Health Center,' presided over by a physician and helpers, and a board of three women—I presume trained medical nurses. Also the 'Centers' are to do the removing of tonsils, adenoids and what not of school children. He stated that at present the school physician merely notifies the parent of its child's need, but if there is a convenient 'health center' the mother may —or perhaps must (?)—take the child there at once to be carved, at little or no expense.

"When asked why we should be switched from the needed 'Mothers' Pension Law' he did not reply, except to say that he thought this could be postponed, on account of the present wave of sentiment against rapid in-

Ready-made Arch-supports are an unsatisfactory make-shift because everyone's feet are different and the displaced bones, enlarged joints and deranged ligaments complicate matters still further.
We make our supports from carefully prepared plaster Paris casts and alter them to accommodate changes brought about by the wearing of the supports. In order to give relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the foot be restored to as normal a shape as possible.
We have an extensive experience in the correction of flat feet, broken-down arches and other deformities of the feet and are able to promise our clients comfort and relief in every case.
It is not necessary to wear clumsy shoes with our supports; on the contrary, we often restore daintiness of appearance to feet badly deformed and unsightly.

"Ordinary medical treatment is to be condemned. Aspirin is given for the pains, often up to twenty-five grains per day. This drug is supposed to be harmless, but it ruins the digestive organs, in spite of all that has been said and written to the contrary. After trying the various health resorts and baths—in cases of those who possess means—the patient is usually told that various operations are needed. So the teeth are removed; then the tonsils are removed. Then the gall bladder and the appendix are taken out. And then the recommendation is that the large intestine be excised. Of course this does not cure, but it often brings death.

"I remember one lady who had eight teeth, both tonsils, the gall bladder, the appendix, and both ovaries removed. She was of course worse than ever, so she was told that she could not recover unless she had her colon taken out, but the chances were fifty-fifty that she would die on the operating table. This lady recovered the use of all her joints in about three months, under correct hygienic and dietetic treatment, in spite of her operations.

Olive Oil.

OLIVE oil is being imported from Spain in sufficient quantities to meet the requirements of this country, for the first time since the war commenced.

It does not, so far, seem to have had much effect on the price of California oil, which is awful.

Olive oil should be used in the form of an emulsion, thoroughly beaten up. To it may be added a little lemon or tomato juice. Use it as a dressing, over salad or vegetables.

Olive oil "straight" like any other "free fat" should be used only in moderation. Ripe olives should be used more freely, and are much better than olive oil. Where the canned olives are used, the liquor should not be discarded, but may be used as a bouillon, or in soup, with tomato juice. Dried olives are the best. They are not "processed." They should be more generally used.

When the Stars Fell.

THE census enumerators, in Los Angeles, found a negro woman whom they officially entered as 115 years of age. She had no idea of what year she was born in, but based her statement on the fact that "the year the stars fell" she was told to remember that she was 29.

However, the "stars fell" again in 1866—a wonderful sight, that I sat up all night to witness, in London. If this was the year she remembers, it would make her age only 82.

They Will Fail.

ACTUATED, not by the public welfare, but by a desire to maintain the closed shop, and so increase their income, the medical union in California has for several months been organizing for the next State Legislature, to procure a law forbidding everyone to practice the healing art, except themselves and Christian Scientists. They do not include the Christian Scientists because they believe in their methods, but because the Christian Scientists are strong, and therefore to be feared. However, the turn of the Christian Scientists will come, whenever the medical union thinks it is strong enough to tackle them.

The political doctors will fail, in this, as in former attempts of a similar kind. The people are no more ready to accept restriction to one school of the healing art than they are to accept restriction to one church of the worship of God.

Preparing for War.

WE HAVE been told that the best way to avoid war is to prepare for war. I have denied this and have been scoffed at, by some.

Now comes a good authority, Sir Frederick Maurice, former Director of Military Opera- [illegible] trust in [illegible], for war and you get war."

"The best preparation for peace is universal physical—not military—training. Also, a cessation of eating devitalized food, and blood poisoning by serums, which sap the vitality of the nation.

A Medical Autocrat.

A WASHINGTON dispatch announced that rivalry has developed for appointment as surgeon-general of the public health service. The four-year term of Surgeon-General Blue expires January 14.

No wonder there is rivalry, for a job whose holder arrogates to himself, in some respects, more power than the President.

However, the high tide of medical autocracy has about been reached.

Preserving Fruits.

A REMARKABLE method of preserving fruits and vegetables, without ice or chemicals, was described in The Times. The inventor is a Los Angeles man. If this thing works, it is highly important. Chemicals are harmful, and food begins to decay with great rapidity when cans are opened, or the food is taken out of cold storage. Such food should be used only for emergencies.

Sanitation vs. Medication.

A CORRESPONDENT of The Times recently called attention to lack of cleanliness in many hotels, and in restaurant kitchens—carpets that have not been cleaned for years, and unsanitary conditions "behind the scenes" in restaurants—and asked why the Board of Health does nothing.

Because such ordinary and sane sanitary work is beneath it. It is too busy ferreting out infractions of Medical Trust laws, to pay attention to such things.

What we need is more sanitation and less medication.

In Germany.

THE Berlin Board of Education decided on a thorough cleaning of the libraries of all high schools, and to remove all books "contradictory to the new spirit of the times." All books of chauvinistic, imperialistic, militaristic, nationalistic, monarchistic or anti-Semitic character will be eliminated immediately.

This is a good move, and looks like a step in the direction of real republicanism.

NERVOUSNESS

Ametropathy is a new method of treating disorders of the nerves and inner organs, and is adapted to many diseases ordinarily considered as desperate, which the known methods of cure admittedly fail to reach.

Ametropathy proves many diseases to be mere functional disturbances with no organic lesions whatever for support, thereby enormously simplifying the process of cure.

Ametropathy as an auxiliary to other medical procedures has no equal and never disappoints.

It is, however, not suited for acute and infectious diseases, but for ailments of a neurotic character only; for instance:

Nervous Prostration—Hysteria—Despondency.

Insomnia—Headaches—Neuritis — Tic — the Jerks. Dizziness—Fainting. Spells—Epilepsy—Fear—Restlessness — Irritability — Dyspepsia—Moods—Asthma—Nervous Heart — Menst. Pains —Wasting — Goitre — Eyeache — Crosseyes—Astigmatism—Cataract — Failing Sight — Stuttering.

Good Short Stories from Everywhere.

Compiled for The Times Illustrated Magazine

Acid Test.

DR BROUGHER loves to relate his first attempt to teach a Sunday-school class:

"They were all lads between the ages of 9 and 12 and I did my best to interest them and make them learn something. However, when I had finished I asked them to tell me what they were going to tell their mothers they had learned, and you can imagine my chagrin when one youngster spoke up in all serious and replied—'nothing.'"

Rival Attraction.

IT WAS during the last Liberty Bond campaign and Mary Pickford was addressing a big audience. Suddenly everyone began to laugh. Little Mary blushed, fidgeted, went on with her talk but finished as quickly as possible and rejoined her friends.

"Did I say something awful?" the little film star demanded anxiously.

"No," Mark Larkin reassured her, "but right in the middle of your speech a cat walked onto the stage. It walked up and down behind you and finally sat down and listened."

CONGRESSMAN GILLETTE was speaking of the Mexican situation. "It reminds me of the story they tell of Willie and his mother," he remarked.

"'Don't worry, Willie, she's going to.'"

Joining the Lodge.

"CUPID SPARKS runs across hundreds of anecdotes concerning newly weds. Not least among these is that relating to a certain member of the Jonathan Club.

It was the wedding supper and in the midst of the revelry a telegram came. Thinking that it must be a message of congratulation, the groom asked the best man to read it aloud. Imagine the consternation when that worthy read:

"Hope you have better luck than we did," signed by the bride's two ex-husbands.

Sufficient Grounds.

IN A CERTAIN Los Angeles county court the other day a case for divorce came up, only to be dismissed by agreement of the opposing counsels. It seems that the man instituted the suit, had a row with his first lawyer and then came to Lou Guernsey.

"What are your grounds for bringing this suit against your wife?" asked Lou.

"Well," said the man, "I came home early the other afternoon and as I stepped into the door I heard my wife talking to an insurance man. I was just in time to hear her say:

"'I won't pay another cent. I've been paying this policy on my husband for eight years and I've had no luck yet.'"

Honest Official.

A FEW weeks ago, Mayor Snyder slipped away from business and made a personal and incog tour of "Sonora town" to get a line on conditions there. During the tour his eye was caught by a trinket in a shop window and he stepped in to purchase it.

The proprietor was just about to close shop and in fact had already taken his cash box into the back room. As he had to fetch it, in order to make change, he called his young son, and, perching him on the counter, whispered in his ear to keep his eye on the customer.

A moment later he returned with the change and the urchin blurted out:

"He didn't steal anything daddy, I had my eye on him every minute."

Making it Plain.

"WE'VE given Japan a hint, and a strong hint, about that Shantung business," said Senator Borah. "In fact, we've spoken up like the Nola Chucky girl.

"A Nola Chucky young man said to his girl one evening, 'I saw the finest kind of a suit in Handmedown's window the other day for $20.'

"The girl sighed.

"'Was it a wedding suit,' she asked?

"'No, a business suit.'

"'Well, I mean business,' she replied."

placed herself on the other side of her father and his feather bed. But that instinct for concealment was her undoing. Her movement attracted the attention of David Craig, who glanced her way and then stood stock still in surprise. Recovering himself, he hurried forward to poor Miss Beloit, who felt ready to collapse.

"Miss Beloit! I thought you would be home before this time. Your train was slow, but it was scheduled to go straight through."

"I—I—got off the train," she gasped weakly, "and am just going to take the next one."

At this her father, seeing an opportunity to annoy someone, leered forward. "You see, sir, she had to stop and get her poor old father out of the poorhouse."

Whatever David Craig saw, witness deponeth not, for just then the expected train mercifully appeared and Katherine and her ill-starred companion were bundled into it, and, much to her relief, it started immediately.

Two hours later they arrived home and Katherine shut herself in her room, after having fiercely and unjustly attacked her mother for having driven her father from home.

That scene on the railway platform was always with her. She recalled David Craig's expression, and with flaming cheeks remembered how she had boasted to him of her distinguished relatives.

That afternoon she wandered out into the yard where her mother was down on her knees weeding a flower bed. As she looked at the worn, frail old woman, a great wave of pity swept over her, and she went over and leaning down said, "Don't work so hard. Come and rest; that's a nice mother."

Her mother looked up, grateful for this sign of relenting, and said, "I like to have things nice, and flowers do help. And, Katherine, about the feather bed. It needed renovating, and that was all I was going to do. I offered him another one; he is so unreasonable."

"Poor mother, I know," said Katherine gently, and then, hearing someone approaching she turned to meet David Craig who was walking briskly up the path.

"Mr. Craig!" she gasped, "how did you happen to stop here?"

"I've been in San Francisco since Wednesday," he answered. "Was called there on important business, and as soon as I could, I came here."

Katherine turned to where her mother had been, but she had vanished; and confused and embarrassed Katherine said, "Mother is gone."

"Yes," he replied, smiling. "I guess she saw I wanted to see you alone."

And then looking squarely at her, he said, "Miss Beloit, was that your father who was with you at the junction Wednesday?"

She would have gladly lied, but knew it was useless. She felt that she understood his motive in asking. If there was some mistake, it would put their relation back on the old basis. She never in her life hated anything so badly as to have to say, "Yes, it was my father."

"I'm glad of that," replied Craig, with evident relief in his voice, "for now I can ask you to marry me."

"Marry you!" she gasped, and her surprise was not feigned.

"Yes. To be sure, we have not known each other long, but four weeks of intimacy is equivalent to years of casual acquaintance; and as for me, I am sure I know what I want."

"But," she whispered, determined to have no misunderstanding. "Father!"

"Oh that's all right. You see, I would have spoken when we were driving to the train, but your evident family pride scared me out."

She blushed in shame. "It's all true," she finally said. "The Beloits are one of the best families in the State, but my father is the exception." And then with rising anger, "He is a lazy, selfish old man who has never supported his family nor done anything else that he ought to do."

"Well, I'm very sorry," soothed Craig, "but I'm glad, too. For, you see, my own father is just an old Scotch shoemaker who guzzles over his porridge, and occasionally takes a wee bit too much toddy; and my good old mother can barely read and write. I wouldn't ask anyone to marry me without telling this, and I thought you would never understand. But now, you see, your father makes it all right. That is," and his voice became deep and very tender, "if you think that you can care for me. It's your love I want."

As Katherine went to his outstretched arms, she realized at last the full meaning of life and love and peace.

The New American Dye---Lee's Dye-It.

Bob Lee Discovers a Real Lustrous Dye.

Thousands of housewives in Los Angeles use Lee's Dye-It, but few of them are aware of the long hours of application and study which it took Robert L. Lee—the discoverer—to perfect this wonderful dye.

The man who first exclaimed, "Genius is nine-tenths drudgery," was nearly right. Ask Bob Lee, the manufacturer of Lee's Dye-It, and he will convince you that it's so. "But," adds Bob, "you must also have the other tenth, because genius predicates the faculty to do things."

It took Mr. Lee more than ten years of experimenting with chemicals and colors to perfect his famous dye. Now he is beating the German scientists at their own game of manufacturing a dye that will color—really dye—any material without boiling from wool or silk to the sheerest of fabrics, as well as rugs, carpets, upholstery, leather and wood. By using Lee's Dye-It, the article dyed will stay the color desired.

Bob Lee is a Southerner—a Virginian and relative to the famous Confederate general, Robert E. Lee, but he has all the characteristics of the up-to-date American business man. Alert, aggressive and tenacious, he would be a success at any undertaking.

Sitting in his office at 718 South Hope street, Los Angeles, Mr. Lee recounted his trials in discovering a dye equal to, if not superior to, any other dye in the world.

Twelve years ago as the western agent for an eastern manufacturer, he began to study and to experiment with dyes for coloring, as well as prolonging the life of carpets and rugs. Finally he succeeded. In a short time he was making contracts to dye carpets and rugs from proprietors of big business houses, hotels and clubs. From Seattle he went to Portland and thence to San Francisco. In the Bay City his success was tremendous, and among his assets are the finest of recommendations of his work from most of the big companies and individuals in that city.

All this time he was continuing his experiments to make a dye which would thoroughly color but not injure the finest fabric. Protracted study began to tell on him and believing that Los Angeles offered even a wider and a better field for his dye business, he came here three years ago. He has been in this city ever since. It was here that he succeeded in making a dye which he claims is superior to any other dye made.

Bob Lee says emphatically that Lee's Dye-It is the only dye on the market which you don't have to boil. It is not a mere tint, but a real, lustrous dye. It is put up in liquid form and is so simple to use, that even a child can use it to dye its own or its dolly's garments.

There is no better dye made that excels it for changing the colors in lace and lingerie. The color does not wash nor boil out after being dyed with Lee's Dye-It, so long as a strong alkali solution is not used in the water. Faded carpets, rugs or upholstery can be quickly made to look like new and to wear twice and thrice as long by dyeing them with Lee's Dye-It. Just a few drops added to hot water does the trick.

Any woman can do it successfully herself. It is not a soap, it does not stain the hands, neither do the materials need any rubbing or boiling.

Lee's Dye-It is manufactured and put up all ready for use in handy bottles. It can be purchased in 14 different colors.

Any color of the rainbow can be readily and successfully made by combining the colors.

The rainbow effect is cleverly illustrated in the multi-colored skirts on Kewpie dolls, to be seen wherever a large display of Lee's Dye-It is on sale.

Mr. Lee has already introduced this new American dye in the leading department stores in Los Angeles and also in drug stores and grocery stores. It retails at 25c a bottle. There is no waste. A few bottles will save many dollars in making over coats, suits, sweaters, shirt-waists, blouses, skirts, collars and other lingerie.

As an instance of economy, say you have a carpet which costs $5 to $20 a yard. In a year's time the color has become dull or faded. The carpet can be re-dyed with Lee's Dye-It at 25 cents a yard. Will make it as good as new for another year. By that time it can be dyed again. Old carpets treated with Lee's Dye-It are far better today than inferior new carpets bought from $5 to $7 a yard. This statement may be verified by reference to work done by Bob Lee at one of the city's foremost department stores on Broadway.

The directions for using Lee's Dye-It are quite simple and are as follows:

Rinse garment in clear water, then place in warm or hot water containing enough of LEE'S DYE-IT to produce the desired shade. A FEW DROPS of LEE'S DYE-IT added to the water will give a beautiful, delicate color. To make shade deeper, add a few more drops of LEE'S DYE-IT, and hotter water. Thoroughly saturate the garment in the DYE-IT; do not rub, nor allow it to remain in the DYE-IT. Rinse well in clear water, but do not wring.

Many various shades and colors can be produced by combining these dyes. Special colors and shades made to order.

CONDUCTED BY
HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N. D.

Germs and Serums.

IN THE November and December numbers, Physical Culture (New York) published a symposium on the subject "Do Germs Cause Disease?" My contribution to the symposium—which appeared in the December number—was as follows:

"Germs" do not cause disease. They do not appear until disease has established itself. Dr. Alexander M. Ross, Fellow of the Royal Society of England, member of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Quebec and Ontario, Professor of Hygiene and Sanitation at the St. Louis Hygienic College of Physicians and Surgeons, vice-president of the Association of Hygienists of America, member of the British, French and American Association for the Advancement of Science, etc., etc., has written:

"I charge that they have encouraged superstition and humbug by the germ theory of disease. I do not question the existence of infinitesimal micro-organisms; but they are the result, not the cause of disease. They are scavengers; their legitimate work is to clean out the sewers of our bodies. Whenever there is decay, pus or decomposition, these little lifesavers are doing their work of neutralization, sanitation and purification. They feast upon effete and decaying matter. They are beneficial helpers to an important end."

The germ theory of disease was introduced and popularized by Virchow, a German chemist. Yet Virchow, before he died, told one of his students that if he lived, he would devote his life to refuting the germ theory, and to showing that germs are an effect, not a cause of disease.

Why, then, is the theory still preached and practiced?

Because its abandonment would place the medical fraternity in an unpleasant and even ridiculous position.

Under medical supervision, scores of persons have subjected themselves to the most severe tests—swallowing germs of the most deadly diseases, rubbing them into their throats, and inhaling them, and no harm has resulted. For obvious reasons, publications owned or controlled by the medical profession have ignored these proofs.

A person whose blood is free of waste matter can no more "catch" disease than you can grow wheat on a cement sidewalk. If there are cracks and dirt, wheat may sprout and flourish, in proportion to the amount of dirt. So with disease.

By proper alimentation and elimination, through rational diet and physical culture, you may render yourself immune to all disease.

The germ theory is a dangerous and harmful medical fad, that will before long pass away, but not until it has done incalculable harm to the human race.

In the "Philosophy of Health," J. H. Tilden, M.D., writes:

"The question may be asked, for it is certainly pertinent: 'Why do most regular physicians believe in the germ theory? It is not reasonable to believe that they are all dishonest; neither are they fools.'

"Indeed not. I hope I am incapable of coming to such an egotistical opinion regarding physicians. I certainly do not wish the reader to believe that I mean to convey the thought that physicians generally are knaves or fools; for I do not believe anything of this kind. When I use the word 'quack,' I mean that many are unconscious quacks. For example: If a surgeon had the operating craze developed to the extent of compelling him to see an operable appendicitis in every case of discomfort in the lower bowels, he is an unconscious quack.

"When typhoid fever is allowed to slaughter an army, as it did ours in the southern camps at the beginning of the Cuban war, it is due to nothing more than filth [and embalmed beef.—Ed.]—a disgraceful application, or no application, of sanitary science. Today sanitation is as rigidly carried out as military tactics. Yet this fact is suppressed.

"Where there is an unnatural and seemingly determined effort to suppress truth, there must be a corresponding reason. There never was such a determined effort put forth to secure perfect sanitation. After thorough drainage was secured in Panama by the cutting of the canal, improved health of the country was, and is, pointed to as proof of the germ theory.

"And if the change is simply another point of view, fallacy will still be in the saddle, and no one will be wiser or safer, so far as knowledge of cause and effect is concerned.

"It is said that human life has been extended fifteen years because of the germ theory. It will be well to remember that the people generally are better informed on health subjects today than ever before. The regular profession is killing fewer than ever before. Christian Science, Mental Science, and 'New Thought' generally, have run off with almost if not quite, 15 per cent. of the profession's patients, and fully 25 per cent. of its yearly income. People are tumbling over each other to get out of the way of the hypodermic syringe and drugs. This latter fact is one substantial reason why doctors are killing fewer, and why the regular profession is so anxious to get under cover and safely ensconced in an established germ theory, made stable by Federal backing. The brains of the profession know that the theory cannot stand on merit. Hence this undignified campaign of misrepresentation and miseducation, the literature of which is found in almost every paper and periodical published.

"No matter how much success is achieved by this baptism of fallacy, now being administered to the people in a bolus of sugar-coated literature, there is not enough merit in it to keep it from breaking down of its own weight, even if it succeeds in securing Federal indorsement."

The Proposed Chiropractic Law.

FOLLOWING is from Kate P. McNaughton, N.D., D.C.:

"In the Care of the Body of recent date you published a letter from Dr. Charles A. Cale of the Los Angeles Chiropractic College, regarding the initiative measure to be placed on the ballot next fall. Dr. Cale quotes a part of Sec. II of the bill: 'Chiropractors may use all natural agencies such as light, heat, electricity, food, hydrotherapy, mechanical and manual manipulations.' There would be no objection if that were all; but the rest of the section reads: 'as auxiliaries to chiropractic,' which means that for all such practices, to be legitimate, should the bill in question become a law, a chiropractic license must first be obtained from a chiropractic board; and the applicant for such license must have first obtained a chiropractic diploma after an attendance of two years in a chiropractic college.' Talk about medical trusts—this has them beat a mile.

"Yes, it would give me a license, I have a diploma from Dr. Cale's school, and also from a school, old, when chiropractic was born, but I believe in fair play, and I have no desire for anything which is denied some one else. This means that naturopaths, osteopaths and all other non-medical schools, must only operate as 'auxiliaries' to chiropractic, since it would nullify all provisions in the medical law for such practitioners.

"There is a big division in the chiropractic ranks over this attempted steal. I was present at that convention and know. It is no wonder we have medical domination, when such methods are used by non-medical people. I hate medicine in all its forms. I hate the spirit of bigotry and intolerance in the drugless professions just as much and so long as God gives me breath I'll use it against such attempts to 'climb on stepping stones' of the 'dead selves' of the other fellows."

To this it may be added that chiropractic is only one branch of the nature cure or naturopathy, which embraces all rational methods of aiding nature to eliminate disease.

Arthritis.

ARTHRITIS is the name given by the medical profession to one of the many forms of rheumatism. They are good at finding new names for diseases, but not so good at curing them. Arthritis is thus defined, in a medical encyclopedia:

"A generic term, signifying any disease involving a joint, but more strictly an articular inflammation. All the structures composing and surrounding a joint, including the synovial membrane, are embraced in the inflammation. It may be traumatic, rheumatic, syphilitic, supperative, tubercular, gonorrheal, or due to typhoid infection, or to gout, or to spinal lesions. It occurs as acute and chronic arthritis."

Rheumatoid arthritis is the same as rheumatic arthritis. It is a name invented for one form of the disease.

"Arthritis deformans" is the most terrible form of rheumatism. If you wish to call it a separate disease it does not matter, but the fact remains that it is due to the same causes as other forms of rheumatism. It is generally looked upon as an incurable disease, but it is far from being incurable. Provided bony union (anchylosis) has not taken place in the joints, the same means will cure arthritis deformans that cures other forms of rheumatism, namely, living so that the blood becomes pure and clean.

Arthritis deformans is inflammation of the joints, with accompanying deformity. Hands and wrists are favorite seats to begin with, but in advanced cases most of the joints in the body, especially in the limbs, may become affected. The tendency is for the disease to take hold of joint after joint. The affected joints grow more numerous and more useless, from month to month. They become more or less fixed, and in time bony union takes place.

Arthritis deformans, taken before bony union has taken place, is curable. After the joints are locked with lime and other deposits, they will remain that way, unless they are broken. However, the pain can be overcome. If the body has a fair amount of resistance left arthritic deformans is curable.

Rheumatism, in all its forms, is due to the accumulation of uric and other waste matter in the blood, caused by long continued dietetic errors. When a person has health and digestion, the waste settles in the muscles and joints. When the digestion is poor, a person avoids rheumatism but gets chronic dyspepsia.

Obviously, thereore, the only possible way to cure is to eliminate the poison from the blood, and to stop putting more in. Eat little meat, plenty of fruit and vegetables, especially raw green stuff. Water treatment, sun and air-baths, massage and spinal manipulation are excellent aids, but will avail little, so long as the acid blood is not sweetened by an alkaline, non-acid forming diet.

Regarding ordinary medical treatment, R. L. Alsaker, M.D. writes:

Just Larry—Press Agent—An Aerial Romance

by WALTER H. OGDEN

JUST a wisp of a sunny-haired girl she was, strangely reminding one of some lovely woodflower as she sat up among the palms and roses on the balcony of the Schermermoon Apartments. The pale blue matinee, despite its concealing folds, could not altogether disguise the shell-like fragility of her body, nor could the slight application of rouge conceal the delicate pallor of her face. Her hands, so tiny and tapering, were apparently always busy with her pencil, and the strange soft brilliance in her eyes was not wholly ascribable to the fever fires that were slowly consuming her vitality.

None in the Schermermoon knew her full name, nor asked. It was rumored that she came from some foreign place and that she was a story written. Her diffidence concerning herself and her work had won even motherly Mrs. Marley to refrain from inquiring into either. Herself an enigma, yet her sweetness and shy way of diverting sympathy from herself to others who were in much less need of it had won her the adoration of the whole household.

Prof. Gratz, gruff old director of a great theater orchestra in the city, appeared to derive inspiration from her mere presence in the house. The piano in the parlor often became a thing of unusual melody under his supple fingers, engendering weird, beautiful fantasies, tripping, joyous chaminades and wild, haunting sonatas. It was his wont, after these manifestations of affection—for that was the only manner one could expect of old Gratz to show affection—to slam down the piano top with a prodigious bang, after which he would go straight way to his rooms, growling into his beard all the way up the stairs. Sometimes she stopped him at the top landing to thank him, whereupon he seemed oddly pleased but would only growl the louder. If she was amused she was also grateful, for she could understand lonely old Gratz perhaps better than anyone else. His inspiration was her inspiration for her very life had been music, though lately fallen into a pathetic minor key.

Then there was Bud the silent, gaunt-faced gardener, who daily paid monosyllabic court to her as she sat out among his flower children.

"It seems almost," he confided to Bella, the cook, one day, through the open window, "It seems almost like the plants growed better up there where Miss Barby sits. I b'lieve she talks their language and coaxes 'em. Sometimes—" here his seamed face grew almost reverent and he lowered his voice to a whisper—"Sometimes I almost b'lieve she's jest a little flower, herself, come to life an'—an' droopin'."

"Ah, the swate mite av a colleen she is," sighed Bella. "An' the ould docthor gives her but a little more time. Ah, the pity av ut! An' her so young, too."

"The good dies young," Bud returned heavily and trudged away to his endless work among his plants, brooding over the pitiful plight of one blossom against which his skill could avail nothing.

It seems queer that of all the generous and sympathetic members of the big family at the Schermermoon, Larry should have been the one to be most closely associated with Barbara. A press agent is one many erroneously imagine would distort a story of his own grandmother's funeral if he thought it would give him good copy. There are exceptions, however. Larry was one of these. Perhaps that accounts for it in a way, though it was Lamonte, the daredevil and darling of all who gather wherever discussion runs high upon the subjects of pounds-per-horsepower, struts, the advantages of this fuselage over that and the like, to whom we are indebted for this story. For Lamonte was the peer of them all when it came to taking a man-made creation of steel, wood and linen and cutting capers with it in the ether.

Larry came to the Schermermoon during the latter part of the month, engaging a suite adjoining that of Miss Barby's. A big, shrewd-eyed, capable man was Larry, with a sun-bronzed face and a queer, crooked smile. He appeared continually to be keeping something under cover. It was characteristic of him that he paid his rent far in advance and signed "Larry" in the register. His habitual taciturnity quickly earned him the sobriquet of "Spinks" among his new neighbors, whom he seemed to enjoy, in his quiet way.

Of course he came to know Miss Barby, rooming so near her in the house. He fell naturally enough into the habit of dropping into her rooms in the late morning to say "hello." Also of chatting with her, now and then, during the evenings. She liked Larry for his quiet, unassuming confidence and she discovered, too, that he was not half so slow to think as one might be deluded into believing by his exterior appearance. Larry was pretty much all press agent though he took his work much like a stoic instead of the usual explosive, cigar-consuming nervousness so apt to be associated with those of his profession. It was by reason of his uncanny, almost occult power of foresight that he was able to work so quietly and without visible haste. Having cogitated in his brain for an hour or so in the evening over the next day's work, he always had a schedule before him. Which is not to say, you understand, that he was not prone to seize upon whatever opportunity chanced to place in his way. He used those to amplify his schedule. And everybody knew of Lamonte—which should speak well for Larry's publicity genius.

Yes, he came, within a few days, to hold a certain fondness for little Miss Barbara. He couldn't explain exactly why, unless it was that she talked much less than other women of his acquaintance and that the silences between them were companionable instead of embarrassing. Or perhaps he had heard our conversation, from which he had gathered that Miss Barbara had not long to live.

It was kind of her, he thought, to come out on the balcony this evening and sit with him instead of accepting the invitation of the young broker, downstairs, to go for a spin in his new roadster. Below them, dotting at short intervals the black and oily roads, glowed the soft lights, rendering the fringe of darkly-silhouetted palms and the softer and more feathery, low-arching branches of the pepper trees things alluringly lovely. There were the long-drawn snore and chortle of machines as they sped along the boulevards, the distant melody of a band concert in a near-by plaza and all the other familiar noises that combine to make far-western nights the loveliest in the world. Certainly the little balcony seemed a most desirable spot, indeed.

Sitting there listening and studying the profile of Miss Barbara's quiet face, Larry obtained rather more enjoyment from his cigar than usual. He had noted the extreme length of her eyelashes, the tilt of her nose and the sensitive lift of her chin. He couldn't see her hair very well, but he knew it was there—a piled-up mass of sunshine. There was nothing shy about her, he thought: merely reposeful. He liked that. It stamped her as—well, yes, out of the ordinary. She was almost desirable if it weren't for—he dropped his cigar end into the tall ash jar and leaned far back in his chair. Decidedly he must not fall in love with Miss Barbara.

"Smoke another, please, if you will. They seem, from the odor, to be such good ones, and I don't mind the smoke in the least," she said, without turning her head.

They were her first words for nearly a half-hour. He smiled. She didn't know, of course, that he averaged but one cigar each day. He stepped into his rooms to get another from the box. On the way back he obtained a steamer rug.

"You mustn't get chilled," he said, arranging it about her. "These nights drive the thermometer mercury down further than one imagines."

She enjoyed his way of performing trivial acts of courtesy like that without any suggestion on her part.

"You know," she said, with a sweep of her hand to the fairlyland-like landscape below, "all this is so wonderful to me. I had never imagined that so much glamour and romance could be present in a country so comparatively modern. One expects it in Spain or Italy, but here"—she made a helpless gesture. "Here it is as much or even more alluring than there. I suppose the lights account for the fact. They are so much more adequate and effective."

He nodded, then:

"You have lived in Southern Europe?" he asked.

"For three years in Seville. Afterwards we were in Naples. My father was in the consular service."

For a long time they sat there, he smoking and regarding her thoughtfully; she thoughtful and not regarding him at all. His second cigar burned short and he leaned forward to drop it into the ash jar.

"Miss Barbara—isn't that what they call you?"

She nodded and altered her position to look at him. Plainly he was disturbed. His face appeared rather strained in the half-light up there.

"Are you writing a book?" he asked abruptly.

"Yes—Larry."

He seemed relieved.

"It's none of my affair," he apologized, "But I'm interested. Not at all curious, as you might apply the word," he hastened to add. "Just interested in—well—in you, yourself. Quite by accident I heard about you, downstairs—" he stopped and she distinctly perceived the deep flush that stole up to his brow.

For several moments neither spoke. It was the first awkward silence between them. She broke it.

"It's true," she said sadly. "The doctors give me but a little while longer to—to finish my narrative."

"I was a brute, Miss Barbara," Larry muttered. "Please forgive me. I've never had much to do with women."

Hers was a twisted little smile.

"Would you care to see the manuscript? You'd be the only one and—and I know you better than the others here."

"Wouldn't it be warmer inside? You really ought not to stay out here much longer."

"I—I have to be carried in," she stammered, confused. "But if you will call Mrs. Marley—"

"I think we can manage," he said almost brusquely.

Before she fully realized what was happening, he had her in his arms. A moment later she was lying on her chaise longue and he had snapped on the lights. She could not have, for her life, defined the deliciously warm sensation through which she had passed. Nor could he, though whatever it was, it was tinged with compassion as he realized how frail, indeed, was her tiny body. They gazed at each other, startled, then, as though mutually determined to forget the incident, evaded each other's eyes.

"You—I thought you might be interested, as the story has to do with an aviator and his romance. I learned today from Mrs. Marley that you were press agent for Lamonte, who has been flying every afternoon over the park aviation grounds."

"Getting ready for a tour," Larry mumbled, staring frozenly at his shoes.

"I hope you don't think me unduly inquisitive," she murmured, smiling.

His face was a dull, brick-red when he raised his eyes from an absorbed perusal of the rug design.

"Why, no! Of course not," he assured her.

"It's a queer coincidence," she said slowly. "But I had Lamonte in mind when I started my work. I saw him fly once in the East. His work is so spectacular, so finished, so—so abandoned, don't you know—like a hawk escaped from captivity and out for a frolic—" a racking cough shook her, leaving her pale of face and quivering.

Larry arose and closed the window, then stood staring out for a long time. Finally he turned away, his face somber in the lamp's subdued glow.

"Have you ever seen Lamonte—face to?" he asked quietly.

"No, Larry."

"Or his photos?"

"No. They don't particularly interest me. It's his flying—that, to me, is sufficient. In fact, I haven't had any desire to meet Lamonte in person. You see, I've made him a sort of composite ideal," she explained. "He is my hero of heroes and I'm trying to breathe the best of all I know of men into his character, yet leave him entirely human, with human faults and weaknesses, much the same as any other man. He would be the kind that could be patient with me even when I have to portray his faults."

Larry averted his head.

"I really can't conceive of any man who could be otherwise with you, Miss Barbara," he said gently.

"Do you think he—that he—"

Larry nodded, smiling down at her.

"Yes, I know he would."

"Are you well acquainted with him?" she inquired timidly. "That is, outside of business relations, I mean," she added, coloring a little.

Larry hesitated, then laughed.

"Why, yes. We are the very closest of friends."

"Then he is a good man, Larry?"

She had propped herself up on one elbow and was covering him with a gaze fraught with the deepest concern. He again hesitated, then:

"I think Lamonte always means to live a clean and uncompromising life," he answered slowly, picking his words. "I couldn't say more, Miss Barbara, if I were speaking for myself."

She was lying quietly when he looked up.

"I watch for his flight, every day," she said, at last. "I know him by his machine—I would know him in any machine. No man ever flew with such serene disregard for life. In a way it is splendid; in another, terrible. When he spirals up and up, I am filled with a panic lest he should fall. But when he dips so easily and somersaults, I grow almost calm. It seems then as though he were revelling in his own element. It is when the drone of his motor dies out and he dives that I fear most for him, and my heart goes down—down—down with him until he falls out of sight behind the housetops. I live in an agony of suspense until I get the latest issues of the papers. Sometimes I think my heart would beat out like the sound of Lamonte's motor if I read that he had fallen in a wreck." She lay back and closed her eyes. "It's the one thing that keeps me working, I think, instead of going under. His flying is my inspiration or stimulant, so to speak," she said absently.

Again she was shaken in the grip of the relentless cough and again she was left shivering from the agony of it.

"I'd better be leaving you," said Larry, himself wincing. "I'm afraid you'll—"

"No! Not yet," she whispered, smiling fixedly. "You've been so good to listen, Larry. Won't you bear with me while I tell you the sequel? I must tell someone. I—I must!"

"I undesstand," Larry said. "It is worrying you and the worry, in my estimation, is half of what is shortening your existence. I wish to God I could give you a little of my own life, Miss Barbara, if such a thing were possible."

"Why, you remind me strangely of my Lamonte," she breathed, startled.

"I'm afraid I'm a poor apology for an ideal—your ideal," he protested, coloring and half smiling.

"But no!" she insisted. "Certainly, you are an ideal for somebody."

"For nobody, Miss Barbara," he said gravely. "Lamonte and his press agent are both free agents, I fear, and, sometimes, very lonely fellows."

"Then I shall play the fairy godmother, while I am able, and you shall come to me with your loneliness. Will you not do this, hereafter—Larry?"

For a moment he considered her unsmilingly, then:

"Nothing could afford me more genuine pleasure," he assured her.

"Then you will find the manuscript in the lower drawer of the table. It may give us common ground for a camaraderie. You will do me a favor if you will read it and come to me with the criticisms I know you will have."

. . . .

Larry did not sleep that night. The gray light of dawn found him reading the second time the last page of the littered pile of script, his fifth cigar burned to the band.

"Impossible," he muttered, then, as though reconsidering: "Almost impossible. She's so madly in love with her hero that she gives her poor heroine no chance, at all. Poor little duffer!"

He did not stop at her door that morning, but he did come out on the balcony that evening, after dinner. She was there before him, more delicate and piquantly lovely than ever. For a long time neither spoke.

"Well," she said, at last, "What is your verdict, Dr. Larry?"

"You've a wonderfully original story there," he answered. "I took the liberty of going over it with Lamonte, today."

She gasped.

"You didn't tell him?"

"I told him nothing. Merely a matter of getting his views on a few criticisms. You aren't angry with me, Miss Barbara?"

"No—no. It's splendid of you to help me."

He shifted uneasily in his chair.

"If I—we knew how you intended ending it we could help you even more, I think. Can't you furnish us with just a rough synopsis of the final chapters?"

"Yes, of course if you really think—"

"I do," was his emphatic declaration. "So far, you've kept clear of the technical side but I don't exactly see how you are to wind it up without entering into a bit of detail. That would give it an air of realism, you see. Also, that is where I—we might give you a bit of first-hand aid. Don't you think so?"

"Yes, certainly," she agreed quickly. "But as far as I've gotten—"

"Splendid! It runs as naturally as a mountain stream, with falls, shoals, rapids and mist all placed where they were meant to be."

"I'm more pleased than you can ever know," she murmured. "I was afraid you wouldn't like it. Now, where was it I left off?"

"The princess has told the aviator lieutenant that she can't ever see him again. Her father is intent upon squelching their affair, I believe. Both are heart-broken."

"Ah, yes, well, then he goes to the aviation field on their big gala day and goes up in his machine. By a spectacular series of loops, he spells out, in the sky, the letters of the words 'I love you.' Then he suffers a fall and is killed."

Her face was very miserable after this. Larry frowned ahead into the gloom, rolling a dead cigar between his fingers.

"Sounds good," he said shortly. "You ought to have someone slip into his hangar, though, and file a strut or something to weaken his bus. Possibly he might do it himself—no, you don't want suicide. I'll tell you, have the king—her father, you know—order his mechanicians to do it. Some little motive for the accident."

TRAPPING AS A RANCH SIDE LINE.

The Garden Beautiful in Southern California.

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON.

DURING the past few years the United States has received more new plants direct from the field of discovery than in its entire previous history. In times past we were altogether dependent on Europe, principally England, for novelties, arriving here after they had ceased to be novelties on the other side. It was the boast of England, and one to be proud of, that it was the pioneer in plant collections in unexplored lands, and furnished the world with nearly all that was new. And England still prosecutes the work. But the United States government had the late intrepid Frank N. Meyer in China and surrounding countries for several years, in parts where white man had never before trod. And his discoveries were many and of great value. But his work was equalled, if not surpassed, by that of a private English explorer, Ernest H. Wilson. So the Arnold Arboretum, connected with Harvard College, hired Mr. Wilson and sent him into the Asiatic wilds in quest of new plants. And he kept a perfect stream of them flowing into Boston, some of the most wonderful and most valuable new things the world has seen. A few of these have reached California, but in years to come we shall have many. Mr. Wilson is now assistant director of the Arnold Arboretum and on January 10 delivered a lecture before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, entitled "My Sixth Journey to the Far East in Search of Plants for American Gardens." It was illustrated with 100 lantern slides from photographs taken of vegetation in the wilds of Korea, Japan and Formosa.

A National Palm Park.

A national park commissioner recently in Southern California visited the wonderful palm-filled canyons near Palm Springs and expressed himself as strongly in favor of setting aside this part of the public domain as a national palm park. This will be gratifying news to thousands of nature lovers and still more pleasing to the few earnest workers toward such consummation who have spent years seeking this cherished goal. Many of the palm groups present perfect pictures, even though few in number, and it is such a one we illustrate this week. No finer group of a half-dozen has ever been presented, worthy indeed of Federal care and enclosure to preserve them from injury and possible extinction.

Private Plantsmen.

There is a constant stream of retired business men coming to California who become so rejuvenated when they have inhaled our life-giving ozone for a time, that they chafe to get back into harness. Then we have local business men who lay down business cares by selling out, only to find such recuperation in rest that they pant for new commercial conquests. Again, men sell their business, still in the prime of life, intending to retire; only to find they cannot remain inactive. In all these classes some take to golf, many to gardening or farming in a small way and many follow a plant fad. A few days ago one of the latter called on the writer and stated he had found it necessary to be busy so commenced growing palms, found it seductive and went into it deeper. Now he finds himself in possession of 8000 Cocos plumosa for which he must find a market.

Budding Avocados.

In budding avocados it is better to use leaf or wood buds than fruit buds. If fruit buds are taken the tree will bloom so profusely when young that they can make but little growth and when crops set nearly all of the fruit must be pulled off when still very small. If wood buds are used the trees will be extremely vigorous for a few years and when they do bloom and fruit it is a sight fit for the gods. The writer recently saw two trees, budded on the same stock, from the same tree, and in the same hour. One is four feet high and weakly, flowers profusely and bears good fruits if but a few are left. The other is more than double the size, of great vigor, and is now coming into blossom for the first time, and what a crop! Even the flowers are twice as large as those on the small tree.

The Oak-root Fungus.

Much complaint is heard of the ravages of the oak-root fungus and recently a large camphor tree was killed by it, the first one of record. It is especially virulent with the common live oak, Quercus agrifolia and less so, perhaps on other species, though the largest tree the writer has seen killed was an Engelmann oak. In low lands toward the sea from Los Angeles and in Orange county it levies a heavy toll on eucalyptus and other ornamental trees and shrubs, sycamores, walnuts, pepper trees and even citrus trees, though the latter are most resistant of all named. But out in the Alhambra-South Pasadena section, where oaks once were plenty, orange trees have occasionally perished for the past twenty years, many cases having been examined by the writer.

Splendid Heaths.

The other day the writer saw a half-mile of Erica melanthera, one of the best of Mediterranean heaths, the best lot known in the local field. They were seven feet high, half of which growth was made during the past year. To say just how much they bloomed would be to lay one's self open to criticism but the writer has never seen plants bloom more profusely. The plants need a well-drained soil in full sunshine and plenty of water during the growing season. Though not widely grown, we have few shrubs that do so well and yield so abundantly of floral beauty. Erica persoluta alba is a white variety also well adapted to our Southland. E. melanthera being pink with black anthers, as the name plainly states, mela being Greek for black.

The Montezuma Cypress.

In swamps of the southeastern part of this country there is a tree known as the bald cypress, perhaps for the reason that it is not a cypress, though it is bald enough, for it is one of the few deciduous conifers. When it is in leaf a young tree is very attractive. But down in Mexico is an evergreen species that is a beauty at all times. Ours is Taxodium distinchum and the one in our sister republic (?) is T. mucronatum. Few have tried to grow it but out at the H. E. Huntington place at San Marino are fine specimens thirty feet high that are so attractive the writer never visits the place without giving them the "once over." The foliage is in appearance more like that of our redwood than any well known to local plantsmen.

A Word from Wordsworth.

"Laying out grounds," as it is called, may be considered as a liberal art, in some sort like poetry and painting; and its object, like that of all the liberal arts, is, or ought to be, to move the affections under the control of good sense. If this be so when we are putting together words or colors, how much more ought the feeling to prevail when we are in the midst of the realities of things; of the beatuy and harmony, of the joy and happiness of living creatures; of men and children, of birds and beasts, of hills and streams, and trees and flowers, with the changes of night and day, evening and morning, summer and winter, and all their unwearied actions and energies."

Transplanting.

At this time of the year much planting and transplanting is going on. The reader is cautioned not to allow roots to get dry or great harm will be done. All plant food is taken in through minute root hairs near the tips of the smaller roots. If these get dry or are otherwise injured, they die and no new ones grow out in their places. Nature repairs this defect by forming new roots which have, of course, the same powers and functions of the former set. But this takes time and energy and we should not devitalize plants by allowing the roots to become dry.

Why Trees Die.

Wood is practically indestructible unless it is attacked by living organisms. A piece of wood lying upon the ground would last for centuries if the air was perfectly dry, for few fungi attack except considerable moisture be present. As every part of a tree contains water, a wound in a tree is easily and usually attacked. Infection through wounds is the most common cause of decay or disease. Someone wishes to know why the heart of a tree rots when nothing can get at it from the outside. The inquirer is wrong; the trees are always attacked and decay begins from the outside.

For Red Berries.

Cotoneaster pannosa bears the best crop of red berries, with the least care or special soil or conditions of any berried plant we grow. For a couple of months past this vigorous shrub has been loaded with a heavy scarlet crop and the wild birds have had a glorious feast on them. The shrubs are attractive at other seasons but are grown purely for the berry crop. Any good soil appears sufficient for their needs and none have been found that do not thrive.

Garden Rationally.

"An unerring perception told the Greeks that the beautiful must also be the true, and recalled them back into the way. As in conduct they insisted on an energy which was rational, so in art and in literature they required of beauty that it too should be before all things rational."

Whipple's Yucca.

One of the most striking objects of Southern California landscapes betimes is the floriferous Yucca Whipplei, called Spanish bayonet, Spanish dagger, bear's grass and other names of questionable application. Some of these flower stalks surpass in beauty and effectiveness and plant produced in a garden, as witness those we picture. No white flower spikes in the world can rival them.

A Rare Tree.

Los Angeles, thou hast lost the breed of noble trees! There was a Pittosporum once that would have brooked the eternal devil to keep his state in Elysian Park as easily as a king. But after the conquest of General Frost in 1913 all the horticultural sharps could do was to gather about the remains and say to all the world: This was some plant!

For there was but one Pittosporum eriocarpum in Los Angeles, and but three in the State, one at Santa Barbara and one at its suburb of Montecito. The latter two survived the cold snap of January 6, 1913, for the writer saw one of them a few months ago and it showed neither lack of vigor nor scars. The tree is not particularly beautiful but it is odd. In color it is like the young growth on blue gums, a decided gray, even the bark being gray. The flowers are yellow, with a bananalike fragrance. We grow a dozen other species of Pittosporum, some of which are among our most popular small trees and shrubs.

African Bamboo.

Africa has few native bamboos and but one of size or importance. Bambusa arundinacea, which is also an Asiatic species. Several smaller species abound and one, Arundinaria tessellata, runs down to the Cape of Good Hope. There are no bamboos in northern Africa, for the plants stop some distance before the Saraha desert is reached.

The acreage of hay harvested in California last year was practically the same as in 1918, but the yield per acre was better, and the total production was 1,319,000 tons greater. The high price which has ruled brings hay back again to the position of being California's most valuable crop, it being worth to the State $75,630,000 in 1919.

The One-Man Tractor You Can Use Every Day

It really replaces Horses and Mules

HERE is the Indiana's "New Special California Type" Tractor, a one-man, single unit Tractor, built from the ground up to meet California and Arizona conditions. It will save its cost over and over again, whether your orchard or ranch is large or small. It costs about the same to buy as four horses and does more work than they can do.

The pictures above show "The Special" built low, with 42-inch wheels, in order to get under the trees, and when hitched to the implement measures only about 12 feet over all.

You can back up, with implements attached, as easily as go forward, enabling you to get in corners and close to the trees.

Built to handle the implements you ALREADY OWN.

Built to run at 1½ to 6 miles per hour as you desire—you sit on the seat of the implement—the natural place—with the operating levers right at hand. The surplus power runs the tractor so easy that it moves along steadily and smoothly, requiring practically no attention.

The INDIANA, with a 50-inch wheel, is very well adapted for cotton and corn cultivating, as it has 27½-inch clearance under the axle. Also adapted for alfalfa ranches, as the operator rides the seat of the mower the same as the cultivator or disc shown above.

Double Mating Versus Natural Selection.

THE FERTILITY QUETION. BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERC.

NO QUESTION has been more prolific of discussion than that of double mating. For the most part it applies to the parti-colored breeds and varieties, being particularly observed with Barred Rocks and Brown Leghorns. For the benefit of the inexperienced, it might be well to add that double

No question has been more prolific of discussion than that of double mating. For the most part it applies to the parti-colored breeds and varieties, being particularly observed with Barred Rocks and Brown Leghorns. For the benefit of the inexperienced, it might be well to add that double mating implies certain attributes in males and females for the production of exhibition females and another mating for the production of exhibition males. It is a well-established fact that certain matings in even the self-colored breeds will throw high-grade females and others high-grade males, but to accomplish this some experience in selection is essential. To the minds of many breeders the double mating system is objectionable and the hope is expressed that show-room requirements may be so modified as to allow a more natural selection to produce both high-grade males and females from the same matings. This would give encouragement to beginners and at the same time render it easier to satisfy buyers of breeding stock. So experienced a breeder as the late I. K. Felch, who bred Barred Rocks for fully fifty years, was opposed to the double-mating system, giving expression to his views in the following pointed paragraph:

"Nature is the only law we should recognize; single matings, the only matings to be tolerated. When both males and females cannot be secured from a single pair the standard description should be condemned and changed. To be standard a breed or variety should produce from a single mating 60 per cent. of progeny that will score 90 to 95 points in every case where a truly valuable strain has been established by proper selection and careful mating. To describe both males and females that will allow this to be done is the only method that should be tolerated in our standard, for the best good of the greatest number.

A Show Winner.

First Blue Orpington hen at recent Poultry Breeders' fixture, Miss E. M. Henry, Pasadena, exhibitor.

Fecundity and Size.

Some time ago reference was made in these columns to the possible relation of size of breed to fecundity. It was observed in the series of egg-laying contests in Australia that prolificness in a few generations seemed to reduce the size of the bird. So pronounced was this that a standard size had to be introduced in order to check this reduction in weight. How long this would have continued does not matter, though we might have had a race of Bantam Leghorn egg layers which, persistently bred, would eventually have "run out." All of which goes to show that other factors must be considered as well as the good old laying habit. It is our judgment that standard weights in breeds should be maintained, and that if this is done the progeny of even good layers will maintain size. Many of our White Leghorn hens and pullets with good productiveness impress us as being rather small. There can be no ultimate profit in prolificness if weight, stamina and vigor are not also maintained. Give us the bird that has sufficient reserve power to go on the mat and hold its own from generation to generation without any sacrifices as to size, vigor and breeding qualities, even though the progeny will not register up in the 285 egg class in the laying contest. Do you agree with the proposition?

An Indication of Values.

Most of us realise that the egg covers a much larger value in the economic schemes of things than market poultry; but few are aware of its dominant character in the atmosphere of trade and traffic. The exports of poultry produce from Ireland furnish some interesting data bearing on this phase of the subject. The value of eggs exported in 1917 was nearly a million pounds sterling greater than that of butter and three million pounds sterling greater than that of bacon and hams. Coming down to eggs and poultry meat, the figures are still more astounding. The value of eggs is stated at 7,688,815 pounds sterling and that of poultry at 1,598,931. Allowing for the fact that the egg breeds (Mediterraneans) dominate in California, we do not doubt that the variation is equally as great. The reader will more fully appreciate the largeness of the above figures by multiplying them five times, which will nearly express the sums in American dollars rather than in pounds.

Duration of Fertility.

No less an authority than D. F. Laurie, the author of one of the best books on poultry feeds and feeding, has recently published an interesting bulletin in Australia on the Duration of Fertility in Domestic Fowl Eggs after the removal of the male bird. In one instance the record covered a period of twenty-four days after the cock bird had been removed and consisted of a batch of ten hen eggs (or as near that number as were laid and set every day) and resulted in the following percentages of fertility covering each day: First three and fifth days, 100 per cent.; fourth, seventh and eighth days, 90 per cent.; ninth day, 80 per cent.; sixth day, 77 per cent.; tenth day, 70 per cent.; eleventh and thirteenth days, 50 per cent.; twelfth day, 42 per cent.; fourteenth and sixteenth days, 20 per cent., and seventeenth day, 10 per cent. On the fifteenth day and from the eighteenth day onward all were infertile. All of which is interesting, though it may also be exceptional and hence not conclusive. Undoubtedly the virility of the male bird in this case was exceptional. Something must also be allowed for feed and care; if intensive it would not prove of average occurence. While the percentages are suggestive and not without value, it would nevertheless have been interesting to know the precise number of eggs from each hen that proved sterile after the male bird had been removed. Allowing for the fact that a 65 to 70 per cent. hatch is regarded as a good average by the general run of commercial hatcheries, the matter of fertility is not only interesting but of practical importance.

Beginner Wins Firsts.

One of the successful entrants in the Southern California Breeders' Association Poultry Show was Ferdinand R. Bain, president of the Southern Counties Gas Company. This is Mr. Bain's first season as a breeder of fine poultry, but, making a dozen entries, he carried off twelve prizes, including eight first ribbons and four seconds. Mr. Bain exhibited some fine game birds, chief of which were his breeding pens of Black Breasted Reds, Brown Breasted and United States Marines. Each of these groups drew first prizes. A handsome English Black Breasted Red cock carried off first, as did also a hen and pullet of the same breed. In the turkey entries Mr. Bain took one first and three second prizes.

RABBIT ASSOCIATION SHOW IS EXCELLENT.

Under the auspices of the Southern California Rabbit and Pet Stock Association, the first exclusive championship rabbit and cavie show to be held in years began at 241 South Broadway, Los Angeles, yesterday. It will continue until Wednesday evening. Andrew T. Wilson is manager of the show and Carl E. Sherman superintendent. The judges are the best procurable—C. S. Gibson of Detroit; C. C. Hawley, Dallas, Tex.; L. H. Salisbury, Pasadena, and Edward Diecke, Lombard, Ill. There are over 250 members in the association, comprising the leading rabbit and cavie breeders of the southern half of the State, the officers being: President, William D. White, Alhambra; vice-president, L. H. Salisbury, Pasadena; secretary, C. E. Chittick, Los Angeles; treasurer, J. E. Love, Pasadena.

Awards to be made at this show are the most valuable and extensive offered thus far. In addition to the cash prizes, nine cups and twice that number of special prizes will be awarded. Prizes will be given to the following classes: Flemish Giants, New Zealand, American Blues, Checkered Giants, Belgian Hares, Champaign de Argente, [illegible] Black and Tan, Havana, Himalaya, Japanese, Polish, English Lops, French Lops and Imperial Blues.

The Los Angeles Creamery is preparing to seed the 1000-acre tract adjoining the townsite of Van Nuys on the north, purchased by them recently, to alfalfa, and will augment the above number of cows by about 1000.

Los Angeles Sunday Times

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION

SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 25, 1920.

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION.

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY.

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Tractor Section is the only farm journal in the west printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

A Pressing Question.

"WANTED—Harvest hand, $1.50 per day and found."

This want advertisement brought a ready response in Kansas at a time within the memory of men who are still rated [illegible]. And the farm hands would work tw[illegible] hours a day, and were glad to get the work and the wholesome meals served by the farm wife.

The average farm wage in Kansas rose to $3.14 a day in 1918. But if a farmer in the Corn Belt offered a hand double that wage now he would either be laughed at, or told to go to thunder or some other place, for the average wage of a harvest hand in Kansas last year was $5.42 and board, and this year it will doubtless be more. And the hours of work have been cut from twelve to eight or nine, and the quality of the work is not so good, as a rule.

Here in California the growers who produce the food and fiber crops are having a hard time of it getting farm labor at any price that may be offered. The help simply cannot be found and wages fabulous by comparison with the standards of a few years ago do not seem to hold any attraction for the great mass of trained agricultural workers. During the war they went to the cities by the thousands and in the cities they are staying, drawing big pay in industrial plants and determined apparently not to go back to the land. It begins to look as though the H. C. L. question might soon be secondary to the problem of getting enough food for California's needs at any price. The farms won't farm themselves, even with the efficient agricultural machinery that is in these times available, and the world-beating growth in the State's population isn't helping the situation, to say the least.

The emergency suggestion, advanced by thoughtful growers and economists, that Chinese farm laborers be imported under some feasible arrangement as to the time and conditions of their service and be made available to the hard-pressed growers is not one to be dismissed without careful consideration. Something out of the ordinary will apparently have to be done, and no one appears to have come forward as yet with a better suggestion.

Circut a Reality.

THE recent organization of the Western Fair Association, composed of the various fair associations holding live-stock shows in the Pacific Coast States, assures Los Angeles a place in a circuit which bids fair in a few years to rank in importance with the greatest in the country.

It means that the annual stock shows of Los Angeles and the other cities represented in the association will, from now on, be better in every respect than those of the past. Conflicting show dates have heretofore kept many would-be exhibitors from taking animals to this or that event in which they would have liked to be represented, to the loss both of themselves and of the shows that they have missed. Under the association plan it will be possible for an exhibitor to move his stock from show to show, getting the full benefit of exhibiting throughout the circuit and helping to make a success of each individual show. This is certain to result in an immediate and widespread interest among breeders of fine stock and to bring to the shows many who have never made a regular habit of exhibiting their animals to the public. Los Angeles has had two wonderfully successful live-stock shows. The third, under all the advantages of the new circuit, is certain to eclipse both.

Southern California is honored in having C. R. Thomas, whose able management of the Liberty Fair of 1918 and the Los Angeles Live-stock Show of 1919 contributed so largely to the success of these events, at the head of the new association. His election to so responsible a position constitutes a fitting recognition by the other fair associations up and down the coast not only of Mr. Thomas's ability as a show executive, but of the growing importance of this section's live-stock industry.

TRAPPING AS A SIDE LINE ON SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA RANCHES.

BY H. C. DAVIS.

THE trapping season now started promises, for two reasons in particular, to yield the most profitable fur crop ever harvested in Southern California, according to the prophecies of experienced trappers. Furs are greatly in demand, and at higher prices than ever before offered. Added to this, the "old timers" declare, the winter is proving to be an exceptionally cold one, with a consequent improvement in the quality of furs. The animals which have been caught somewhat ahead of the season are said to be exhibiting an unusual thickness of coat.

Fortunately for the many amateur trappers who will enter this attractive field this season, the supply of fur bearing animals appears to be uncommonly good. Possibly because war activities have drawn attention from them during the past few years, these predatory creatures have multiplied most unpleasingly to the poultrymen and rancher, though very acceptably to the ambitious trapper. And, with high prices for once filling a philanthropic role, many a farmer's boy will a-scouting go with the furriers' price lists in one hand, to the end that the bob cat and coyote may soon learn the high price of prowling.

Though probably most of the trapping done in Southern California is carried on as a side line, the present season will doubtless draw back into the ranks many old time trappers who will devote to it their entire time for the three months of the season. Their income for the time invested will be greater than that of the novice because they understand from experience the actual baiting and catching of the animals, and also how properly to prepare the skins for shipping so as to secure the highest possible grading in each instance, and so receive the resulting top prices.

CAREFUL HANDLING PAYS.

These top prices in each variety of skins are well worth striving for, since the five or more grades of any one kind may range from a few cents each for the poorer specimens to a number of dollars, and often the difference lies solely in the care given after the animal is caught. Attention to detail, in fact, from first to last, is of importance in this as in any other business.

Average coyote skins, from animals trapped from the middle of December till the middle of March in Southern California, will this season bring from $5 to $7 each. Last season the very best coyote skins from this section brought as high as $9 to the trapper, and this season's prices are running a full third higher. Price lists from fur houses are offering as high as $18 for coyote skins this year, but it is doubtful if those trapped so far south will grade sufficiently high for such returns.

The gray fox common in Southern California's brush-covered foothills has a price on his skin averaging $5, and the bob cat familiar to the farmer can be expected to yield from $1.50 to $5 for his hide. The skunk, prevalent in most mountain poultry yards, is easily worth from $1 to $3.50 to the intrepid slayer, while the smaller civet cats will return near to $1 each. Badger skins are worth between $1 and $2 for the average specimen, and coons about $3.50.

In all instances higher prices than those quoted can be secured if the skins are prime, and if they are so prepared and packed as to be listed as "firsts." If a trapper learns to do his own grading in making his shipments to the fur companies he can expect much more satisfactory returns for his season's work. Probably the simplest plan is for him to make only two grades, placing only those skins in class one which he is sure are first class in every respect, and classing all others with any defect together. This method will have the certain result of getting him much higher prices for his best skins, and a better average throughout, according to trappers of long experience.

GRADING A SKIN.

In judging a skin for grading, it must first of all be large, and with lustrous, thick fur free from patches and blemishes. It must be "prime," as it should be in the right season, with clear, white skin on the flesh side. If the skin is of bluish tinge, or mottled, it is not prime. To be put in the first class it must also be free from bruises and tears, which it sometimes receives when the animal is killed with a club instead of being shot, or is carelessly skinned. It should be cased or cut open, according to the requirements for the particular skin in question, and it should also be carefully fleshed with the proper tools, properly stretched and dried, and properly packed. If it falls short in any of these respects it does not belong among the first class, high priced skins.

Given a good skin to start with, however, the rest is very simple indeed. In taking the skin from the animal, the trapper must know how it is to be handled. Of the list

Cantaloupe Growing in Imperial Valley.

First watering of the "cants" in January (above) and the baby vines with their "nightcaps" to protect them from frost.

IMPERIAL GOING IN STRONGER THAN EVER FOR CANTALOUPES.

EL CENTRO.—Last year the Imperial Valley shipped 118,339,600 cantaloupes. This year the valley is counting on shipping 150,000,000 cants to all corners of the globe. From an acreage of approximately 14,000 last year, from which 7838 carloads of cantaloupes were shipped, the acreage will jump this year to over 20,000 acres. From this acreage Imperial Valley will ship between one-third and one-half the entire cantaloupe crop of the United States. From 10,000 to 12,000 carloads of lucious mellow fruit will be marketed through one of the finest distributing systems in the world.

With this mammoth harvest less than four months away, the cantaloupe industry in the valley is beginning to show the physical signs which point to the harvest to come later.

Even since the last [illegible] was shipped in July last year, the [illegible] and growers have been busy planning on this year's crop. These plans did not take form, however, until last month, when the plowing and harrowing and re-harrowing and pulverizing of the ground was commenced in earnest. Seeds were planted in the curiously shaped hollows which permit the sunshine to shine upon the seed and yet at the same time protect it from the passing winds and frosty nights and early this month the first cantaloupe vines peeked through the surface in the vicinity of Mesquite Lake and were covered with the white paper "night caps" which are so familiar in the Imperial Valley at this time of the year.

These vines, which are fully three weeks earlier than any vines which have successfully survived the frosty nights which occasionally visit the valley during January and February, are being protected with special care by the Japanese who are growing them. This "night cap" protection will be continued for weeks as the tender vines grow and thrive, and within a short time thousands of acres of cantaloupes will likewise be covered with the patent paper caps held up by their wire rods.

EARLY "CANTS" POPULAR.

This year there seems to be more of a disposition than ever on the part of the growers to raise early cantaloupes. Inasmuch as the harvesting season commences about the middle of May and continues well into July, the vines are planted in succession, depending on when the grower desires to harvest the fruit. The higher priced cantaloupes are the ones on the market first and frequently whole carloads of choice Imperial Valley cants bring as high as $12 a crate. The rush to get the first cantaloupes on the market is keen and this indicates that more growers than ever are endeavoring to be first in the market.

The cantaloupe industry in the Imperial Valley dates back as far as 1910 and has gradually increased in size yearly. Each year there has been a prediction made that the market could not accommodate the increased acreage and this same prediction is being made this year. Annually the growers, through the aid of the distributors, have successfully extended the market until now Imperial Valley cantaloupes go in carload lots into every town in the United States with a population of 25,000 or better. From these towns the cantaloupes are sent by the wholesalers into the smaller towns. The accuracy of the system in not oversupplying any one market, a feature which the government experts aiding the industry have spent a great deal of time on, is attested by the fact that the largest crop in the history of the valley was successfully marketed last

DECIDING ON BREEDS FOR SMALL FLOCKS.

A small flock of hens can be kept with profit by many city dwellers who have a back yard. Even as few as eight or ten hens should produce eggs enough, when used economically, for a family of four or five persons throughout the year, except the molting period.

Householders usually desire not only eggs for the table and for cooking, but also an occasional chicken to eat. For this reason one of the general-purpose breeds, such as Plymouth Rock, Wyandotte, Rhode Island Red, or Orpington, is preferable to the smaller egg breeds, such as the Leghorns. Not only do the mature fowls of these breeds, because of their larger size, make better table fowls than the Leghorns, but the young chickens for the same reason make better fryers and roasters, whereas chickens of the egg breeds are suitable only for the smaller broilers.

The general-purpose breeds are also "broody" breeds, the hens making good sitters and mothers, which is a decided advantage when it is desired to hatch and raise chickens, since the hens of the egg breeds seldom go broody and are in any event rather unreliable sitters and mothers. If, however, the production of eggs outweighs the desire for an occasional table fowl, the lighter egg breeds undoubtedly will be found better, because they lay as many eggs and do so on less feed, with the result that they produce the eggs more cheaply. It is by all means advisable to keep some pure-breed or variety. Where this is done, sales at a profitable figure can often be made of breeding stock intended for market, or of eggs for hatching.

LAMP SEPARATES THE BAD FROM GOOD EGGS.

A good, fresh egg should have a small air space. The yolk should not be very distinct. There should be no black spots or rings. Sometimes the eggshell has fine cracks in it. This is commonly known as a "check" egg, and should not be shipped with first-quality eggs. It spoils very quickly.

Blood rings are partially incubated eggs, which show a distinct ring of blood on the yolk. They are unfit for food and should be rejected. Cause: A fertile egg in which the development of the germ has proceeded until blood has formed and the embryo has died. Ring formation is not present while the embryo is alive, although blood spots or veins may show.

Moldy eggs have black spots that show only before the candle. They are unfit for food. Cause: Field nests or wet nests, holding eggs in a damp place, or washing them. Dampness allows mold spores to enter the pores of the shell and grow inside. Mold can also enter through cracks in the shell.

Black rots look more or less black before the candle and are unfit for food. Cause: Dead chick, accompanied by bacterial decomposition, or extensive growth of mold and bacteria inside of the shell.

Mixed rots, white rots, or addled eggs when turned over before the candle show the yolk more or less mixed with the white. They are unfit for food. Cause: Bacterial decomposition usually following advanced staleness.

Stuck yolk eggs have yolks apparently stuck to the shell. They are unfit for food. Cause: In hot weather, when fertile eggs are kept without turning, the yolk may rise through the white and become attached to the shell membrane. In cool weather the yolk may settle in the shell and become fastened to the shell membrane.

Heated eggs before the candle will show dark, heavy yolks, easily movable and with a distinct reddish glow. Cause: Egg is fertile and has been exposed to temperatures which start chick development. If temperature is high enough and sufficient time elapses, development will continue until the embryo and blood form.

THE FIFTIETH CATALOGUE.

Concise information on home and farm gardening and on agriculture in general is given along with prices and pictures in the fiftieth catalogue of the Germain Seed and Plant Company, just issued. The firm issued its first when it began business in 1871. The catalogue is valuable for both novice and expert in growing plants in Southern California, as it gives advice based on years of experiment in this particular region.

COTTON YIELD KNOWN.

BLYTHE.—The cotton season is far enough advanced to permit of an accurate estimate of the year's total in Palo Verde Valley. Up until the night of Saturday, January 3, some 13,796 bales had been ginned, or had been turned into the gin yards, at the three gins in the valley. It is estimated that about 2000 bales are yet to be handled, making the total output of the valley this year close to 16,000 bales.

For Feeding P. C. A. Feeds

Proof—Positive, Absolute Proof

Here are the records of a line of hens. Hen No. 593, pictured in the center, is the mother of hen No. 79. Hen No. 79 is the mother of hen No. 50, and so on. Read over their egg-laying records and note that each hen laid more eggs than her mother. These hens are from a flock of over 3000 birds, owned by Mr. George C. England of Inglewood, California, one of the most prominent and efficient poultrymen in America. Mr. England uses trap nests, thereby determining the exact laying record of each of his hens. He has hundreds of birds which have made record lays, that almost equal these given here.

The one outstanding feature of these remarkable records is the fact that Mr. England's hens have been, through several generations, and are still being fed on

P. C. A. Feeds Exclusively

There are no other feeds on the market that can show such positive proofs of actual results. Mr. England never uses ordinary feeds — because such feeds do not produce consistently. He demands the very best ingredients, and P. C. A. FEEDS are the ONLY feeds that meet his requirements. At the present time, Mr. England is feeding his entire flock of over 3000 hens P. C. A. BREEDERS' MASH. The quality of the eggs Mr. England secures from his breeding hens is so high that he cannot supply the demand, even at the price of $12.00 a dozen. Results are what Mr. England gets—results are what YOU want—and P. C. A. FEEDS bring phenomenal results.

Further Proof

Another astounding example of consistent laying was established by hen No. 50, pictured above. From the time she laid her first egg until her first moult, she produced 331 eggs in fourteen months and sixteen days. Now note this remarkable fact: SHE WAS IN MOULT 46 DAYS ONLY—and immediately began producing eggs again, laying 22 eggs the month following her moult. This extremely short moulting period, and wonderful production directly following, showed that her strength was conserved througout the moult, proving positively the high availability of the feed she was getting—AND THIS FEED WAS P. C. A. BRAND. Mr. England's hens are noted for their short moulting periods.

Besides Mr. England, there are dozens of large poultrymen who are securing similar results by using P. C. A. FEEDS EXCLUSIVELY.

P. C. A. Formulas Superior

Opinions differ as to the formula to be used in making poultry feeds. What proportions are best for the hen? P. C. A. FEEDS are manufactured under the supervision of the directors of the Poultrymen's Co-operative Milling Association—men who own over 20,000 hens, and know from actual experience what ingredients are best for the hen. The feeds produced by P. C. A. are being fed to more than 400,000 of the finest hens in Southern California.

The above record is just one of many proofs that P. C. A. FEEDS are RIGHT—that P. C. A. methods of mixing are the BEST, and that the proportion of elements used is just what it SHOULD BE.

Do not be misled into buying feeds prepared by inexperienced millers who do not understand poultry. Be guided by experience and actual results.

When better feeds can be made—P. C. A. will make them—for P. C. A. knows every angle of the poulary business.

There are no feeds "just as good" as P. C. A. There is only one "BEST," and that is P. C. A. So when you order feeds for your hens, BE SURE YOU GET P. C. A. BRAND. Note the result of hen No. RX-24—296 eggs in one year. By proper care and by using P. C. A. FEEDS, you can do equally as well with your hens.

Farm News of the Great Southwest

DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—Reports from all parts of the State show that no agricultural labor shortage exists at the present time, though there is keen apprehension over the result of returning to the pre-war immigration regulations. A strong effort is being made to continue the present admission status, as absolutely essential to the success of the cotton industry. Fully 20,000 pickers will be needed next fall in the Salt River Valley alone, to handle a long-staple crop of about 120,000 acres, these in addition to the local supply of hands. These pickers can come only from Mexico, and great loss undoubtedly would result next fall were such labor importations to be forbidden. While it is doubtful if any greater acreage would be under cultivation now in Arizona were the labor supply larger than it is, it also is true that many more laborers would be employed on the farms, even now, were such laborers available at a reasonable wage. Nearly all farmers complain concerning the transitory service they are getting and about the cost, compared with the results secured. This is the main reason for the general resort to tractors and other labor-saving machinery in the valleys of the State. This season the farms are favored through the fact that the mines of Arizona are working at little more than half production, this serving to throw to the farms many laborers. When the peace treaty is complete and measures have been taken to stabilize European exchange, it is probable that every Arizona copper mine and smelter will be worked to capacity, drawing back the hands that now are helping on the farms. There is to be considered also the fact that several thousand Mexicans, now in Arizona, had been thrown out of work by the closing of Sonora copper mines that may be expected to reopen for full production, with consequent demand for labor.

A GOOD YEAR.

REDLANDS.—A survey of the crops for Redlands for 1919 shows that the man on the land has had one of the best years in the history of this section. First in Redlands comes the navel orange, of course. There were about 3500 cars of navels valued at $7,000,000 sold from the groves of Redlands. There were about 750 cars of Valencias, which were valued at $1,500,000, giving the citrus crop a total of close to $8,500,000. The growers received about three-fourths of this. Next in value came the apple crop of the Yucaipa and Oakglen districts. This reached a total of 200,000 boxes of first grade fruit and that much or more of second grade and culls. The crop was worth more than $500,000. The peach crop during the year was one of the best in history, for it reached close to 2000 tons and was valued at $125,000. Apricots were a close second with about 1600 tons of fine fruit valued at $100,000. Then came the olives, which were sold for about $50,000. Tomatoes and vegetables that were grown in and around the city brought the total of the crops grown in the Redlands district close to the ten million dollar point. The growers in most instances are looking for results as good if not better this year. There are many new agricultural trials being made in this section and the raising of goats, both for the milk and also for the cheese, is becoming an industry of real size and value.

WANT TARIFF ON FIGS.

FRESNO.—A higher tariff on the importation of figs was demanded in a resolution passed by members of the California Fig Growers' Association in convention here, after an address by President J. C. Forkner favoring this action. He stated that eastern importers brought into competition with California figs fruit of vastly inferior quality.

GOOD FIRST-YEAR YIELD.

BAKERSFIELD.—From seven acres, H. E. Unruh of Shafter has harvested 12,000 pounds of Pima cotton, which is considered a fair return for a first-year crop. Mr. Unruh will plant Pima next year. Several small tracts of short staple Durango and Egyptian cotton were grown at Shafter last year and all results were satisfactory. From a bale to a bale and a quarter was the average yield per acre. This is the first year Shafter farmers have tried cotton and the success presages a large acreage next season. Approximately 1200 acres were planted to cotton in Kern county during the past season, the greater part of it being in the Arvin district, which has proved one of the most productive cotton sections in the State.

NEW VINE PLANTINGS.

DELANO.—Approximately 3000 acres of vines will be planted in this section this year. Among the farmers planning to put in new acreage are: C. H. Powers, 60 acres; A. A. Burnard, 30 acres; Albert Holsapple, 15 acres; McBride & Fairservice, 53 acres; Felver & Fairservice, 80 acres; Delano Fruit Company, 160 acres; C. A. Scott, 60 acres; J. R. Clark, 20 acres; G. W. McClintock, 10 acres. Besides these, there are the lands of the Sierra Vista Growers, Producers' Fruit Company, Capt. Green, Imbler, Harvey, Conrad, Driver Kim, Pattison, Henry & Phillips and many others who will plant vines and orchards. The planting of new orchards is very active in McFarland, Jasmine, Lerdo, Pond, Richgrove, Radnor, Earlimart, as well as in the Delano district.

HIGHLAND AT ORANGE SHOW.

HIGHLAND.—The local Chamber of Commerce will make an extended exhibit at the coming San Bernardino Orange Show. The chamber has decided that the space to be used for this city's exhibit shall consist of a thirty-foot rack display of 120 boxes, as well as a small table display of citrus fruit. The Pacific Electric will also have an exhibit, the largest that it has ever sent to any orange show. It will consist, not of fruit, but of a miniature reproduction of the great Pacific Electric system through the orange belt, also showing the famous drive known as the "Rim of the World." Upland will probably have the largest exhibit of fruit in the show, consisting of 320 boxes of quality fruit.

PERRIS HAS "COTTONITIS."

PERRIS.—With the building of the Odell cotton gin practically assured for this city, the cotton boom is on here in earnest. This week, the managers of the McClure estate near Menifee, have men and teams at work plowing up the entire ranch of 320 acres. This ranch had already been seeded to grain, but the entire tract will be planted to cotton. Recently John R. Gentle of Los Angeles, purchased 300 acres adjoining the Favorite ranch, south of Perris, on the road to Elsinore, and will plant the entire acreage to Cotton. Mr. Gentle announced that he would donate a site on his property close to the track on which the gin may be built. There is enough additional ground for yards. In anticipation of the coming of the new crop, land values have already looked up. Holders of large tracts who, until recently have been willing to dispose of their land, are now holding back, awaiting the result of the venture with the new crop.

SEED SELECTION PAID.

SAN JACINTO.—James Hornbeck, a local truck gardener, who for eight years has been experimenting with sweet potatoes and yams in order to produce a better strain has secured some remarkable results. Each year he has selected the best specimens for the next year's planting, and the crop has grown noticably better. One stalk of sweets weighed nine pounds as it came out of the ground, and one hill of sweets gave a total of thirty-two pounds. On half an acre last year Mr. Hornbeck raised two tons of sweets and four of yams, which he sold in the local markets at an average price of 4 cents, which amounted to $480 for the half acre.

The price of Sakellarides Egyptian cotton from Alexandria dropped from 95 cents on December 20 to 83 to 85 cents on January 4.

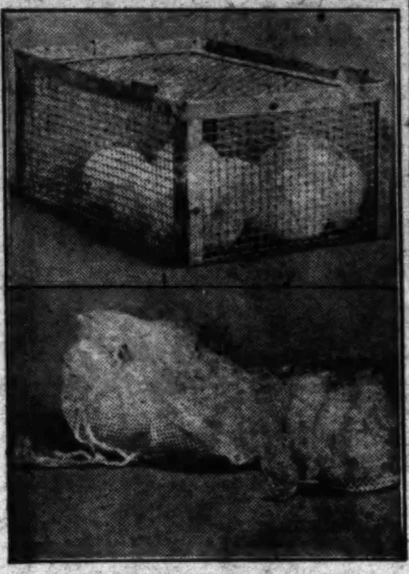
KEEPING TAB ON PEDIGREED EGGS.

"Cockerel No. 1164. The dac of this bird was No. 987. She held egg-laying record of 230 eggs in her pullet year. Sire of this cockerel was son of No. 840, that held a three-year record of 536 eggs."

A bird with a pedigree like the one above is the kind that is commanding a fancy price in poultry circles today. Ancestry counts in chickens quite as much as in cattle or horses, and every poultry man or woman who is endeavoring to build up the egg productivity of his flock seeks a bird with a good egg-producing ancestry to head it. Better still, he buys a pen of pedigreed birds and gradually culls out his common stock. For these birds he goes to a reliable breeder of the variety that he keeps. It is not profitable for the owner of a large flock who is producing eggs and chickens for market to pedigree. The breeder, handling fewer birds and making a relatively higher profit on each one, can afford to expend more time and care on the individuals.

Pedigreeing a chicken means the keeping of a complete breeding record. This involves a record by a leg band or some other accurate means of identification of the male and female which are mated; a record, with the aid of a trap nest, of each egg laid; an arrangement of the eggs in the incubator so that the baby chickc can be identified and the labeling of the chicks by a leg band after their removal from the incubator.



Makes for Exclusiveness.

Wire baskets and bobinet sacks keep the pedigreed eggs separate from the commoner stock in the incubator.

By means of leg banded hens and trap nests the breeder is able to identify every egg produced and to mark each egg. The U. S. Department of Agriculture poultry specialists mark the big end of the egg with the number of the hen and then put underneath that the pen number. The number on the leg band of the hen gives the clue in the record book to her pedigree. The pen number gives the information regarding the sire.

If laying heavily enough eggs from one hen for one sitting may be safely saved when a hen is used for hatching. When an incubator is used a tray contains eggs from several hens. The method which the Department of Agriculture specialists use to identify the baby chicks when they hatch is as follows:

On the eighteenth day the eggs in the incubator are sorted. Each hen's eggs are put into a wire box or bobinet sack. These containers must be large enough to permit of plenty of room for the chicks. Each box or bag is tagged with the hen's number and the incubator is closed, not to be opened until the birds are hatched out of the shells.

Under ordinary conditions as soon as the chickens get their "sea legs" after hatching, they go toward the light in the front of the incubator and drop into the nursery below. Here the temperature is cooler. The pedigreed chicks in the boxes or bags, being unable to leave the tray, may become too warm. After the hatch is over if they show signs of panting the door should be fastened open so a little more air may enter.

As soon as the chicks are dry or after about twelve hours, they are taken out of the bags and a small metal band with a number is wrapped around the leg. This should be folded until it will not slip over the foot. Some breeders put one of these baby chick or pigeon bands on each leg so if one gets off accidentally, there is still one left by which the bird can be identified. As the bands are put on, the record is made in the book. For instance, No. 1 would be the first chick's number and opposite this in the pedigree book would be written the hen's and pen's number of the egg from which it hatched. By this means the accurate pedigree of each chick is assured.

How the identification of each bird is kept as it grows older and outgrows the baby chick leg band is another story.

Buttermilk
does it."

Of course you want to know why and how dry buttermilk does it. It's simple and easy to understand. You know that a laying hen must not merely consume but digest and assimilate feeds high in nutritive values.

Egg production is a severe tax on the bird's system and the greater the amount of nutriment assimilated into her system, the greater the egg production.

Buttermilk insures complete assimilation of all other elements in the feed, and buttermilk not only contains highly nutritious qualities, but is valuable for its prophylactic and therapeutic properties.

This is why the dry buttermilk in Globe "A-1" Laying Mash makes it a better feed.

Just the right balance of selected ground grains, meats, etc., makes Globe "A-1" Laying Mash a good feed even without buttermilk, and the addition of buttermilk places it above the class of competitive feeds.

year at the best net prices to the growers.

When approximately 8000 carloads are placed on the market within a period of six weeks without a glut anywhere and with fair returns to the growers, it would seem that the acme of distribution would be reached.

DISTRIBUTING THE CROP.

This marvelous distribution system, taking in Canada and Mexico, will be tested again this year with an estimated crop of over 10,000 carloads. The outcome remains to be seen. There are a large number of new distributors in the field this year and these men, in the opinion of the old distributors, have made payments and promises to the Japanese growers which have led the old timers to exercise more than ordinary caution. In fact the go-slow and easy spirit among those most familiar with the cantaloupe deal was never more in evidence than it is this year. Each year they have predicted that the newcomers would prove rash enough and a poor season would result, thinning out the ranks of the distributors, until each year everyone has made money, until the tales of wealth to be made in the Imperial Valley cantaloupe fields have gone far and wide.

This year the Southern Pacific and San Diego and Arizona railways, the two roads which will handle the great bulk of the crop, are expected to have a harder time than last year to secure the necessary refrigerator cars.

This is in itself a big problem. For weeks before the cantaloupes are to be shipped the railroad must scour the United States for empty cars in which to take the product to market. The length of the haul is such that one car can scarcely average two trips during the entire season and with an estimated crop of 10,000 cars it will mean that fully 6000 individual cars must be secured. The road promises to do this and points to the fact that last year the mammoth crop was handled in the best shape of any in the past five years.

In order to accommodate the refrigerators, sidetracks are being constructed in many sections of the valley. For miles up and down the railways just prior to the season every sidetrack is filled with empties, from Indio to Yuma, and all through the Imperial Valley. During the night these empties are rushed to the valley. They are loaded during the day and set on their eastward trip the next night. The peak load last season was 349 cars a day. The icing of so many cars is a tremendous job. Most of them are iced at Colton and shipped to the valley with their bunkers filled, although a portion are iced daily in the valley.

Brawley will as usual lead all other sections of the valley in cantaloupe acreage. Westmoreland, Calipatria, Heber and perhaps Seeley will follow in the order named.

CULTURAL METHODS.

The cantaloupe seeds are planted on the south side of a ridge of earth perhaps seven feet wide. By planting the seeds on the south side the benefit of the warm sunshine is secured and the sun's rays strike the earth more directly. As soon as the vines peep through the surface the grower comes along and places a paper cap over the vines. This is to prevent the occasional frosts from injuring the tender vines. As the seeds are planted in a small hollow, which bakes in the winter sun, during the summer time, the placing of the paper cap over the plants in such a manner that the paper does not touch the vine is a simple matter.

From five to seven seeds are planted in a hill and when thinning time comes the vines are thinned out down to two or three sturdy ones.

Hundreds of Japanese are engaged at present in planting and hundreds of others in caring for the vines which are peeping through the surface.

GROWERS TO ORGANIZE.

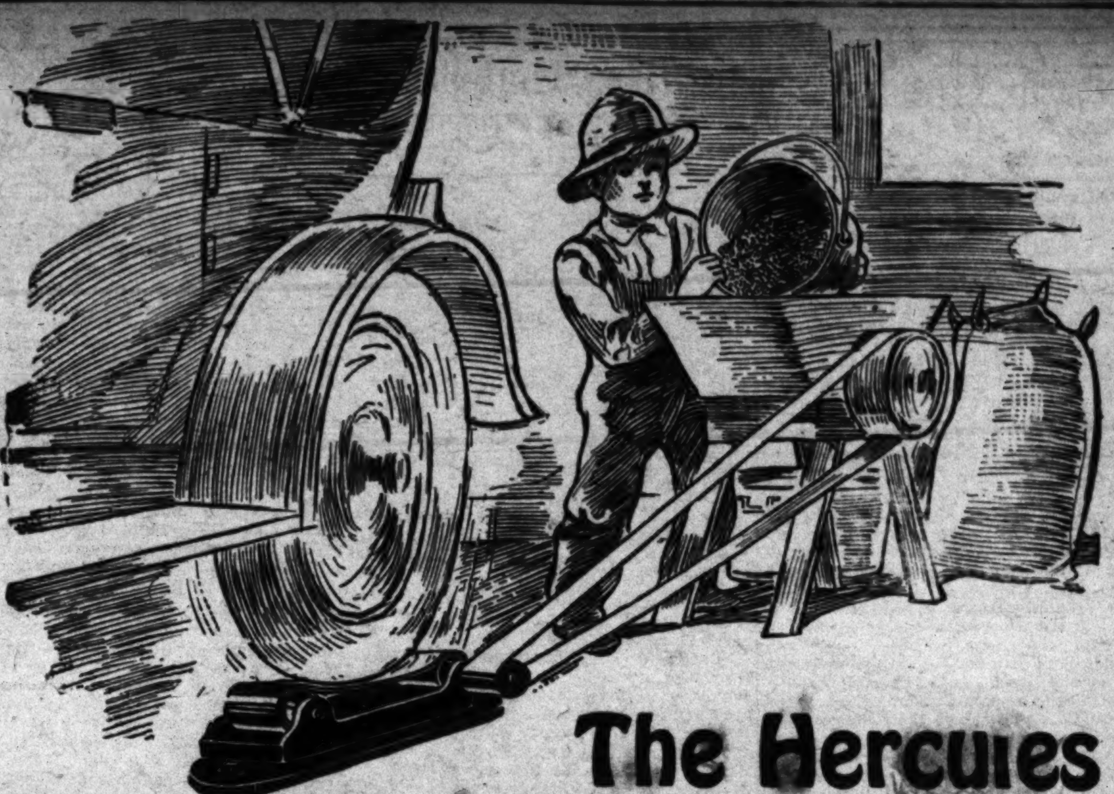
NUEVO.—At a recent meeting of the apricot growers of the Nuevo section it was voted that they form an organization and affiliate with the State organization of Prune and Apricot growers. Arrangements have been completed by which they can store their dried fruit in the Hemet warehouse of the State association. As a result, they are preparing to dry their fruit from next year's crop. Last year Nuevo growers received $50 per ton for their apricots, $10 a ton for cling peaches, and $55 for freestone. By allying themselves with the association they hope to even better these prices next year. The Nuevo district is sharing in the boom which is waking up the Perris Valley, resulting from the assurance of a cotton gin, and a large acreage of cotton for next year. William Honeycutt, who made some of the first experiments here with cotton, will plant 120 acres to the crop. Land values are rapidly rising and would-be purchasers are in considerable evidence.

BUREAU MEETING DATES.

During the last week in January and the first week in February the following meetings will be held by members of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau: January 26, Burbank; January 27, special walnut meeting at Lankershim; January 30, of walnut top-working demonstration, Whittier; February 2, meetings of Glendora, Clearwater and Downey centers.

Sunday morning is probably not a good time for a business call in person but an excellent time for a message in the Farm and Tractor, which is delivered to the farmer by automobile, reaching him when he has the leisure to read it carefully.

Our advertising columns are an education in themselves and suggest many useful ideas.



The Hercules
Power Plant for Every Farm

Operate your farm machinery by auto-power. The Hercules Farm Power Plant puts your car to work—makes it run pumps, separators, ensilage cutters, or any farm machines.

One minute is all the time required to install this Power Plant. Simply run the car's rear wheel onto the Hercules and start the motor. The Hercules can be carried and used anywhere that an auto can go. The tire runs on a broad, smooth belt and gives tremendous power, because of perfect traction.

The large tire surface which engages the belt prevents wear on tire or belt. High speed bearings and accurately machined pulleys insure smooth running. The Hercules will give years of service, even with the roughest handling. The strong, sturdy construction prevents breaking or wearing out.

Use the Hercules on your farm; make it do ten men's work. It has countless uses in addition to these mentioned here. It can be used to

HELPING TOOTHLESS FOWLS TO "CHEW."

The old saw, "as scarce as hen's teeth," would be quite as true if "turkey" or any other member of the bird family had been substituted for "hen." The entire ornithological division of the animal kingdom is toothless. No painful filling of bicuspids in their young lives nor crowning of molars in their later days! When a hen's "teeth" become inefficient she simply discards them and picks up some new ones.

Armed with a beak, the hen is able to pick up food of fairly good size, but she is provided with no way of breaking it into small particles in her mouth, for she has neither teeth nor lips. Instead, the food is swallowed whole and is stored in her crop until needed by the stomach. Then its walls contract and down it goes into the stomach.

This stomach has two parts, one where the food is soaked with a secretion of acid and ferment pepsin, and the other where the grinding takes place. The latter is commonly known as the gizzard. Because of this organ's work in pulverizing food to small particles, the hen and every other member of the bird family is able to dispense with teeth. The "teeth" of a bird are really the "grit" which it consumes with its food. Sharp sand, small stones, broken shell, and similar substances, in the gizzard, assist in pulverizing the other articles in its diet. In fact, this gritty material accomplishes the same purpose that molar teeth do in other animals' mouths. Until it becomes useless as a digestive aid it is stored in the gizzard.

The hard, callous pads of the gizzard are contracted and expanded during digestion by powerful muscles. This motion, together with the grit, reduces the food to fine particles. The grit is retained in the stomach until it is smooth and then is discarded naturally and another supply is eaten to take its place.

For this reason fowls kept in confinement need grit at their disposal quite as much as other kinds of feeds. The grit already in their gizzards, at the time a flock is penned, might be all that the fowls will require for three or four weeks, but if more is not supplied, digestive trouble will soon set in. It is safer to supply it from the beginning. Sand will do for the purpose, but chickens seem to prefer a coarser grit, one of a size between wheat and corn. Oyster shells are commonly supplied to the flock because of the lime they contain, which is necessary for shell formation, but they also serve to some extent as grit in the diet. The pieces become smooth more quickly than a harder grit and a fresh supply must be eaten more often.

First Light Brahma hen at recent Poultry Breeders' Show, Mrs. W. A. Babb, Los Angeles, exhibitor.

U. S. Department of Agriculture poultry specialists state that a hen needs and will consume about one pound of grit in a twelve-month period.

FRUIT-PLANTING GUIDE.

The annual catalogue of the Armstrong Nurseries, Ontario, Cal., is, as usual, a comprehensive guide to California fruit varieties, and is perhaps the best ever issued by that firm. Forty-eight pages of condensed information on trees and other plants and their comparative value constitutes an attractive book. What varieties do best in Southern California has been learned by the experience of these nurserymen during many years. The firm specializes in citrus and tropical fruits, and selects the best buds to be found.

BEE-KEEPERS' MEETING.

Keepers of bees will buzz and debate at the State Exposition Building, Exposition Park, Los Angeles, on February 6 and 7, during the annual meeting of the California Bee-Keepers' Association. This meeting promises to be of unusual interest. Important topics are to be taken up and there will be a call for action on pending legislation. George A. Coleman of the State College of Agriculture will be among the speakers.

EXPECTS A LARGE YIELD OF POTATOES.

RIVERSIDE.—Sixteen thousand sacks of potatoes is the harvest expected by Frank A. Patton from his tract of 175 acres the coming season. Mr. Patton is assisted by his three sons, and while he admits that he has lost many a crop, for reasons assignable to a catalogue of causes with which most potato growers are familiar, he believes he has, by a study of soil, seed, methods of irrigation and other factors, equipped himself to overcome most of the drawbacks to successful potato culture. He was able last year to secure as much as 135 sacks per acre from some of the land he will seed this season, and he counts on harvesting this year an average of 100 sacks to the acre. The first crop will be ready for market in June, and in the middle of July seventy-five acres of the tract will be planted to a second crop, which is expected to mature in November.

The cost of seeding the tract is estimated at $110 per acre. From thirty-five acres last year he dug 3000 sacks of potatoes, for which he received $2.25 per hundred. Mr. Patton regards proper irrigation one of the most essential factors in raising a potato crop. If the potatoes do not have water at the proper time, he says, the skin will set, stopping the growth. He advocates irrigating every two weeks, unless the soil is sandy in which case he would reduce the interval to ten days. These are the handicaps Mr. Patton says he has had to combat in growing potatoes: Blight, scab, tuber moth, frost, excessive irrigation, insufficient irrigation, too infrequent irrigation, dry rot, eel worm, attempting to seed in July without suitable seed, and some other items that did not recur to his mind at the moment.

of local animals given above, all but coon and badger skins are cased. The two exceptions are first slit straight down the belly and then down each leg, and in stretching are laid flat. The cased skins are cut along the inside of each back leg and the skin is drawn off wrong side out. In some instances some fur companies prefer that the skins be later reversed, and packed with the fur side out, but certain experienced trappers say that they ship all California furs with the skin side out. In all instances the bone of the tail must be removed, which is usually done by slitting the entire distance, carefully raising the tip, and peeling the skin back for its full length.

When the skins are brought in they should receive attention with as little delay as possible. Each in turn should be stretched on a fleshing horse, easily enough made by any boy from a pole five to six feet long and some five inches wide, dressed off to fit into the animals head. The skin is then carefully gone over with a fleshing knife and every particle of flesh and fat removed. It is then stretched on a board to fit, or, if open, on some flat surface, and left in a dry, shady place.

After fleshing, if desirable to set the hair, some trappers sprinkle over the skin one part of powdered alum to three of salt and fold away for a few days before stretching. After the stretching is finished the skins should be hung in an airy, sheltered place, arranged smoothly over a wire or rope, for further drying before packing.

When thoroughly dry they can be folded, doubling to make as flat and compact a package as possible. They never should be rolled. Each kind is packed separately, firsts in one bundle, seconds in another. The bundles can then be packed together and covered with burlap, forming bales as nearly square as possible and weighing not more than fifty pounds. These can be shipped by express, and also by parcel post where the odor is not disagreeable.

ENSNARING THE PREY.

While this matter of handling the skins is given first importance by the more experienced, the young trapper is usually chiefly concerned with how he is to ensnare his prey. And truly there are many tricks to the trade, especially when it comes to pitting one's wits against those of the crafty coyote, who is credited by his pursuers with being far "foxier" than the fox himself. In fact, catching foxes is comparatively a simple matter, and well within the reach of the novice, while coyote trapping fairly mounts to a field in itself, though most trappers of experience are able to secure a good proportion in a season's catch.

In the selection of traps there is considerable choice, probably with advantages to all. Double and single spring steel traps, with single, double and even triple grips, all in varying sizes are used by trappers of animals found in this section. One trapper of many years' experience confines himself to a single kind and size for all local animals. His theory is that a small trap catches just as effectually as a large one and eliminates the danger of broken legs which result in the feet being gnawed off and the escape of the animal. He uses a trap which has a spread of four and one-half inches.

Bait can usually be found on the trapping circuit. Rabbits, gophers, squirrels and birds are excellent and easily available bait. There is a legend that long ago, in the pre-high price period, eggs were sometimes successfully used, a custom now obviously obsolete. Fish is especially attractive to coons and cats, and fish heads make an inexpensive and effective bait. The coons themselves are considered good eating by more than one trapper who knows, but oddly enough the only animal in the local trapping list which can be used as bait for the others is skunk! Especially when partially roasted, skunk meat proves attractive even to the wary coyote.

Scents are used in trapping for two purposes—to attract animals and to destroy the scent of man left by the trapper himself. In dealing with coyotes especially, this latter point is of importance. Many commercial scents are on the market, and some trappers of experience make their own. Such simple scents as catnip for bob cats, and asafoetida for coyotes can often be used to advantage in attracting the animals to investigate the bait. The wearing of rubber gloves and overshoes are among the precautions taken in destroying the trapper's scent, and sometimes shoes and gloves are permeated with ordinary barnyard or poultry pen scents further to deceive.

SETTING THE TRAPS.

Traps are usually set just off the runways or trails of the animals, some trappers using two traps for each bait. The bait should be hung some eighteen inches from the ground by a wire to prevent its being gnawed off. The trap is then hidden in the ground beside the trail and just in front of the bait, the jaws of the trap lying at right angles to the trail so that the animal will step between them. The chain leads back from the trap without any indication of its presence. Brush or natural obstructions should be used to form a narrow, wedge-shaped opening facing the trail, hampering movement so that the feet will surely be caught in investigating the bait.

Traps are usually set in strings reaching out in opposite directions from the camp or starting point, so that each can be visited every other day. The distance apart depends entirely on the "lay of the land," and other conditions, such as indications of animals to be trapped.

With such a double string, consisting of sixty to 100 traps, a man will probably find occupation for his entire time, even including his evenings, which must be devoted on his return to caring for the skins of the day's catch. In the foothill sections of Southern California, in a good season such as the present one, the trapper can reasonably expect some four or five animals caught each day. At present prices his receipts should at least rival the wages he might otherwise be receiving for manual labor, which isn't putting the estimate at any modest sum, at that. Besides, the possibilities, as with the miner, are always alluring. Any day he may make a "strike," such as getting a roaming mountain lion, for instance, on which the bounties alone amount to $50. The life of a trapper, particularly when it can be lived in the climate of Southern California is indeed full of interest.

Niagara Soluble Sulphur Spray can now be secured from our Oakland office—where sufficient stock for any ordinary demand is ready for immediate delivery.

You fruit growers—you who have been forced to use a substitute for all or part of your spraying—you will appreciate the real importance of this announcement.

Niagara Sulphur Spray—as you know—is the original Dry Sulphur Spray. It has been used in the most important fruit districts during the past eight years, and in many of the best peach orchards of California, for the past four.

You know, too, that it requires less than other substitutes for Lime Sulphur Solution. Compare our directions for use with those of other manufacturers—if these manufacturers dare to publish the quantities demanded by an Experiment Station or recognized authority on Insecticides or Fungicides.

Directions for Niagara Soluble Sulphur

For Peach Leaf Curl and Twig Borer, use 12 pou Soluble Sulphur Compound to 100 gallons of water.

For San Jose Scale and General Dormant Spraying, use 12½ gallons of Soluble Sulphur Compound to 50 gallons of water.

These directions have stood the test for years, meeting the most stringent regulations applying in such cases.

HIGH MILK RECORDS MADE BY BURR COWS.

The decision of the Burr Farms, Los Angeles, to sell all grade cows to make room for pure-breds will result in the offering of some excellent Holsteins that have exceptional butter and milk records. The big dairy will, on January 27, sell 100 milkers, grade cows, and a number of registered bull calves, at auction.

Here are some records reported by the management to have been made by cows which will be offered: Cow No. 352, made 493 pounds of fat and 10,139 pounds of milk in eight months; No. 345 made 321 pounds of butter fat and over 8000 pounds of milk in eight months; No. 99, made 387 pounds of fat last year, and produced 10,124 pounds of milk; No. 69, a two-year-old heifer, produced 6959 pounds of milk and 340 pounds of fat in ten months with her first calf; No. 17, made 348 pounds of butter fat and 6694 pounds of milk in ten months; No. 470 produced 315 pounds of fat and 6500 pounds of milk in eight months; No. 193, made 394 pounds of fat, and 8651 pounds of milk in ten months; No. 166, made 246 pounds of fat in five months; No. 201, a two-year-old, produced 242 pounds of fat in eight months.

These 100 cows to be sold, says Manager Brown, are the pick of 1000, and not a poor producer will be offered, as the poor ones all go for beef at the farm. The registered bull calves to be offered can be seen at the side of their dams and sires, he says. The sale begins at 9 a.m. and the farm is reached by going east on Twenty-sixth street from Santa Fe avenue.

FEEDING VALUE OF WHEY NOT REALIZED.

Development of a method of utilizing whey as a human food is the object of work now in progress in the Bureau of Animal Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture. It is thought probable that the waste of whey represents a greater actual loss of food than skim milk—which now has become an important by-product in the dairy industry—because its feeding value is not generally recognized. Cheeses have been made from whey, but the demand for them has been limited. The use of these cheeses might be extended if their value for cooking could be brought to the attention of housekeepers.

Investigations of the use of whey solids as poultry feed also have been begun.

Considerable work has been done on the development of casein for use in waterproof glue, and a casein of low ash and acid has already been produced.

A method of producing casein from buttermilk is also being worked out. By use of a solvent to extract the fat from the buttermilk, small lots of casein have been made, and this product was found to be of general good quality and low in fat and ash, but it had the objection of dissolving slowly.

MEASURING A HOG IN PROPER FASHION.

What is the best way to measure a hog? This is a question asked by hog raisers who have read descriptions of hogs and wish to compare them with their own hogs. To get the length measure from between the eyes when the head is down, to the root of the tail. The heart-girth is the distance around the body in a perpendicular plane just back of the fore legs. The loin girth is taken in the same way at a point just in front of the hind legs. The circumference of the leg is measured at the largest place in the hind leg between the hock and the pastern joint. The height can be conveniently taken by placing the hog beside a building on a level floor and placing a board horizontally across his back and touching the building, marking the lower side of the board on the building. The height is then easily obtained by measuring from this mark to the floor.

DENKER HOG SALE.

Louis A. Denker, whose Bouquet Canyon hog ranch is one of the notable places of Los Angeles county, will hold a sale of high-class Hampshire hogs at the town of Saugus at 10:30 a.m., January 31. Animals in this sale will be from winners at California live-stock shows held during the past three years. Ord Leachman will conduct the sale. Many breeders who will attend the Diamond Bar, Winsor Ranch and Ireland Ranch Duroc sales will round up the circuit by looking over the fine Denker Hampshires.

Turpentine is a good remedy for intestinal worms in hogs. Give one teaspoonful for every 100 pounds in milk emulsion for three mornings.

IMPROVING SOILS AROUND THE HOUSE.

BY J. B. CORCORAN.

The placing of buildings, concrete walks and walls and other things that go to make up the average home soon brings complex soil conditions even in places where the soil may have been excellent before building. After the buildings are up you have a north, south, east and west, with intensified reflection on the south, shade on the north and walls and walks of concrete or stone and often a few faucets that leak—all affecting the nature of the soil and the growing conditions of plants.

When plants are grown close to concrete walks and walls there is sure to be a heating up and cooling down of the soil that is very injurious to good plant growth. We expect the soil to warm up with the spring months and remain uniformly warm throughout the season. Any great fluctuations of soil temperature within twenty-four hours causes the root system to contract and lose its "pumping forces." Sandy soil without humus heats up and cools off too rapidly for good plant growth. Humus is the "wool" in the blanket that holds the heat and prevents conduction and radiation. Humus also holds the moisture and both heat up more slowly and cool off more slowly than sand. It is the uniform warmth that is favorable to plant growth and it must be had if we expect plants to grow near walls and walks of concrete. It is well to dig in considerable humus near the walls and walks so as to prevention conduction of heat. After the plants once get a start so as to cover the ground well and fill the lower, sharper angles where the reflection is severest the plants will regulate conditions themselves so far as the soil is concerned. When plants do not do well in sharp angles the trouble is more likely to be with the soil, and its adverse conditions to the root system than with conditions above the ground. Soil should be kept lose near walls and walks.

Lime or gypsum should never be used on light loams or sandy soils. It is doubtful if it should ever be used on the sunny side of buildings, unless the ground is heavy and shaded. Lime or gypsum improves the texture of heavy soils, but if used on lighter soils will bring about unnecessary loss of humus through decay. A good sprinkling of lime or gypsum is just the thing to improve the soil around hydrants or faucets that have leaked or where the soil has become hard and soggy from too much water.

Whenever you see moss working in around hydrants or in shaded places in the lawn it is a safe indication that the soil needs lime or gypsum. Such soils will usually show an acid reaction and there is nothing better for such soils than a good application of gypsum or lime.

It is very doubtful if anything will improve the growth of plants more on the north side of buildings or other shaded places than gypsum or lime. If the soil is well prepared on the south the very best results may be had, but a good growth can not be expected where there is much constant evaporation and loss of heat or fluctuating soil temperature.

Trees, shrubs or other plants that are most susceptible to frost usually do best on the west side if somewhat protected. This position permits the gradual warming up and does not allow the early action of the morning sun.

Some of the most difficult places to get plants to do well are in newel posts of concrete or stone, window boxes and in corners where stone walls are on two sides. In such places the soil should be kept loose and free from the walls and even separated by much humus. If there is shade, give in addition to the above some lime or gypsum and you will be surprised at the favorable response. Porous or glazed jars are certain to offer severe conditions for plant growth unless carefully handled. Good growth can be expected from "water coolers" only by a most careful handling. A good coat of dull paint will remove most of the difficulty providing the soil has much humus and is kept mulched.

Humus, lime or gypsum and cultivation not only improve the texture of soil, but also do what is more worth remembering, that is help to maintain an even, uniform, warm, moist soil. It is the medium uniform warmth found in the protected ravine that is most largely responsible for the heavier plant growth.

Current ocean freight rates per 100 pounds on cotton from New York are as follows: To Liverpool, $1.50; Antwerp, $1.65; Havre, $1.75; Barcelona $2; Japan, $1.75; Shanghai, $1.75; Vladivostok, $1.75.

WINSOR RANCH GETS MANY MAILED BIDS.

R. K. Walker, in charge of the big Winsor ranch sale of Duroc-Jersey hogs at Exposition Park, Los Angeles, January 29, states that many mailed bids are coming in, and many outside buyers are taking a great interest in the sale. The forty head of purebreds to be offered, he says, represent the result of seven years of breeding for a fixed type of hog, and the most careful buying of the best from eastern herds. Over half the offering, it is announced, will be direct importations from the East, the "tops" out of eighty-six head purchased as fall and weanling pigs last summer. They will be by such sires as Great Model, Great Orion Sensation, Orion Sensation, Great Wonder, Great Wonder I Am, Grand Model 8th, Orion Fancy King, and Grand Model Type.

These sows and gilts will be bred to Giant Orion, said to be the largest boar on the Coast, the boar that the Winsor Ranch confidently expects to be crowned king of Duroc sires after his pigs go through the 1920 fairs. He is by the world's grand champion Orion Cherry, Jr., who defeated eleven State fair grand champions when he was made world's grand champion in 1916. He recently sold for $16,500 when over six years old. A few will be bred to an outstanding son of Great Sensation, and out of the $5000 sow Uneeda Lady, a Sensation bred sow, and a few will be mated to the noted boar, Great Model.

FIRST PURE BRED HOG SALE HELD IN VALLEY.

The public sale of registered Duroc-Jersey hogs to be held at the Ireland ranch, Owensmouth, at 12:30 on January 30 will be the first public sale of exclusively pure-bred hogs ever held in the San Fernando Valley.

The Ireland Ranch herd is the pioneer Duroc herd of the valley, and the winnings of Ireland hogs in 1918 at Riverside and Los Angeles included fifteen first prizes and five championships. Some of these prize winning sows and boars will be sold, including Ireland's Maid, junior champion sow of 1918, and a first prize winner wherever shown; Ireland's Mike, second prize boar pig at Los Angeles last year, and Ireland's Lady A, first prize sow pig at Riverside.

In this sale Donald Graham and Avery Newton will have a dozen fine pure-breds of championship breeding, some of the finest sows and gilts in Los Angeles county.

DIAMOND BAR SOWS FROM NOTED BOARS.

Middle-western breeders who will soon hold sales of pure-bred Durocs in the "Corn Belt" are figuring on receiving the largest sale averages that have ever been made according to reports, and speculation is keen as to the figures to be brought at forthcoming California Duroc sales. In many cases the animals being offered in this section are of the same great blood lines as those being sold east of the Rockies and this will make the comparison doubly interesting.

The sows and gilts to be offered at the Diamond Bar Ranch sale at Spadra, Los Angeles county, January 28, will be of Pathfinder, Sensation and Wonder breeding and are litter mates and half sisters to sows that are making noteworthy sales records elsewhere. The sale, on this account, is attracting attention in swine circles beyond the borders of the State.

"The sows we will offer are of the big Duroc type," said Fred T. Gatton, superintendent of the swine department of the Diamond Bar ranch, last week. "They are bred to the very largest boars obtainable. Ace of Pathfinders, for example, measures forty-three inches high, is seventy-eight inches long, has a ten and one-half inch bone and a seventy-six inch heart girth. He headed the first aged herd and get of sire at the National Swine Show, and repeated at the Los Angeles Live Stock Show, being also named grand champion at the great Pacific Coast event. Mammoth Sensation, Jr., the largest junior yearling in the West, measures right up along with the Ace. Most of our offering is bred to these two grand champion boars. Our sows are sired by the largest boars in the Corn Belt, such as Great Wonder I Am, Pathfinder, King's Colonel and Creator. All are sired by champion boars and bred to one."

FEEDING BEET PULP AND HAY TO CATTLE.

Beet pulp and molasses, by-products which have an established value with stock feeders, should be fed with a moderate allowance of hay or other feed in order to make a balanced ration, U. S. Department of Agriculture specialists say.

At the present price of beet molasses many feeders are finding a mixture of molasses with hay or with pulp to be profitable. This furnishes a variety and stimulates appetite when fed in regulated quantities.

In feeding beet-top silage, about thirty pounds per 1000 pounds weight for cattle and three pounds per head for sheep each day seem to be most satisfactory.

Animals not accustomed to beet-top silage should be given a small quantity at first and the feedings gradually increased until the normal ration is reached.

The most desirable market weights of hogs are between 200 and 250 pounds.

DESERT PLANT IS PRODUCER OF RUBBER.

Egyptian and other long staple cotton has brought to Southern California one great automobile tire making company, and others are on the way. The recent discovery of a desert rubber plant bids fair, if anything comes of it, to start still others Los Angelesward.

Dr. H. M. Hall and Dr. Thomas Goodspeed, of the University of California, named to investigate rubber plant sources of the West, have found that the Chrysothamnus nauseosus, or 'rabbit brush," profusely exudes crhysil, from which rubber is made. This plant is widely distributed in the deserts of Southern California, preferring the salt flats. The cultural requirements of this plant are such that it could be grown without irrigation on almost any desert soil with plenty of alkali. It is stated that the plants with the greatest rubber content are found in soil with high alkali content. Certain varieties endure a temperature of 20 deg. below zero, and others survive the hottest summer temperatures. The university authorities believe that this plant should be further investigated with a view to making its cultivation profitable on waste lands of the West.

Thrifty pigs weighing from fifty to seventy-five pounds may be made ready for market in three months if fed the self-feeder way.

EXPECT A DECREASE IN WINE GRAPE CROP.

Early in the 1919 season, the grape crop promised to be enormous. It was a record one at that, but for a number of reasons not up to first estimates.

Shortage of irrigation water in July and August hit the muscat raisins pretty hard and reduced the total production of all raisins from thirty to forty thousand tons. The average yield per acre of raisins was estimated at 1960 pounds, making the total production 180,000 tons.

The total grape shipments the present year amounted to 19,017 cars, but just what per cent. was table grapes is hard to say. Early estimates had placed the figure at 15,000 cars, but car shortage and labor difficulties both intervened to reduce the total. A fair estimate of foreign shipments and home consumption according to the State Department of Agriculture, would be 15,000 cars or about 180,000 tons.

To many, a price of $50 per ton will seem too low, but it should be kept in mind that it is the average to the grower after deducting the packing, transportation, icing and selling charges.

Wine grape shipments were seriously curtailed by a shortage of cars. Many thousands of tons were dried, and doubtless many more thousands of tons were crushed for home made wines. Calculations made from shipments and wine manufactured placed the production of wine grapes in 1918 at 315,000 tons, and in 1919, 230,000 tons. Under conditions prevailing during the past season, a decrease in production can reasonably be expected.

HOME-GROWN FRUIT IS MOST DESIRABLE.

Well-ripened sound fruit is healthful. It is also a valuable food. It should form a part of every meal, fresh when possible, or dried, canned, or otherwise preserved.

Home-grown fruit is desirable—

Because it reaches the family fresh and in the best possible condition.

Because the family has fruit of which it would often be deprived if it had to be purchased.

Because, if the proper varieties be selected, a continuous supply of fruit of superior quality may be secured, regardless of market prices.

Because any surplus may be sold without difficulty, or may be canned, evaporated, or otherwise conserved for use when fresh fruit is not available.

Because the care of the home fruit garden provides for spare time congenial and profitable occupation which is in reality recreation for those who enjoy seeing things grow.

WOULD STOP COTTON GROWING FOR A YEAR.

W. Dwight Pierce, entomologist of the Gage-Pierce laboratories of Denver, wants all cotton growing stopped for a year in the district east of New Mexico in an effort to get rid of the boll weevil and boll worm. In case his suggestion and preparation plans are adopted by Congress and the growers, the pest-free cotton regions of California and Arizona would be called upon during the year of cessation to furnish the entire cotton crop of the United States.

Dr. Pierce's plan consists of ten years intensive work of preparation and one year of absolute cessation of cotton growing in the Southern States, the plans to be carried out by a corporation named by the growers, the preliminary work to be carried on by the Gage-Pierce laboratories, with Congressional approval. The seed, during these ten years of preparation, is to be brought in from Imperial Valley and other pest-free sections. This plan, says Dr. Pierce, has the backing of the Association of Economic Entomologists.

NEW GIN STARTED.

CHANDLER (Ariz.)—Work has been started by the Southwest Cotton Company here upon a fireproof gin, to replace that destroyed by fire a few months ago. It will cost $45,000.

Successful storage of potatoes is dependent on a number of factors; as for example, the quality of the tubers stored, the temperature at which they are held, the moisture content of the air, the size of the storage pile, and the exclusion of light. The proper storage temperature for potatoes ranges from about 34 to about 40 deg.

AMATEUR TREATMENT OF STOCK DEPLORED.

The tendency of laymen to engage in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of live stock is in a great many instances resulting in losses of animal through inability properly to recognize ailment in time to apply needed treatment or through applying remedies not indicated in the specific cases. This is particularly dangerous in the handling of infectious and contagious diseases where not only the original herd is at stake, but where, through the spread of infection, other animals may become exposed and infected.

In the work of controlling hog cholera, for instance, perhaps the greatest hindrance has been the tendency of farmers to attempt the diagnosis and treatment of their own herds, or else to call in an untrained layman who frequently does not recognize the disease or advises the wrong procedure in the handling of the outbreak. According to experts of the U. S. Department of Agriculture it is not always an easy matter to recognize hog cholera, as symptoms are sometimes obscure. Other ailments of swine, such as pneumonia, worms and tuberculosis, at certain stages of development, somewhat resemble hog cholera. Accordingly, training and experience are required to distinguish between these and hog cholera.

The practicing veterinarian should acquire all possible knowledge pertaining to control and suppression of hog cholera. Of late many complications associated with the disease have created a multiplicity of opinions among those who claim to understand the various ailments of swine, and even within the veterinary profession hasty judgment has in many cases led to losses which could have been avoided through a careful consideration of facts, proper diagnosis and treatment. This should emphasize the necessity for the study of cases, including the history, environments and circumstances involved in an outbreak, before attempting to decide on the cause of trouble. Then comes the physical examination of the animals. Look for abnormal action, breathing, gait, appetite, digestion and other functions. Next, take the animal's temperature with a good, reliable thermometer. Even then positive diagnosis is not always possible until a post-mortem examination has been made.

It is evident that all swine-producing localities should have someone available whose services, based on training and experience, are reliable in detecting and prescribing for diseases of live stock. And farmers should realize generally that they cannot afford to jeopardize their herds by attempting to administer treatment which requires a certain amount of technical application. It is better to call a qualified veterinarian than to run the risk of losing valuable animals, to say nothing of the possibilities of causing a widespread epizootic outbreak of a destructive animal disease.

BANK PLANS TO TAKE UP COW TESTING.

PORTERVILLE.—Relation between the banks and the farmer will be made still closer if the plans of the First National Bank of this city as at present contemplated are carried out in detail. H. C. Carr, the vice-president and manager of the institution, is carrying out the proposal for the establishment of a department in the bank for testing of dairy cows. It will be his idea to have this cow-testing association formed and handled by the ranchers themselves, the facilities for the work to be provided by the bank if necessary.

Mr. Carr, who is one of the committee on agricultural education of the Bankers' Association, has been instrumental in financing the boys' pig clubs of this section and has taken a wide interest in the agricultural work of the schools.

FALL PIGS PROFITABLE.

TULARE.—The California Farm Bureau Marketing Association which includes members of farm bureaus of Tulare, Kern, Kings, Fresno and Madera counties, during the year 1919 sold 49,123 head of hogs through its auction markets, with a total return to the breeders of $1,705,000. This is the outstanding feature of a report which has been filed by D. H. Bittner, the manager of the association. The shipments for the year totaled 617 carloads, the heaviest sales being made in May and June, when prices were at their peak. During the summer months, when Chicago prices were around $22 per hundred, the valley sales brought about $2 per hundred below the eastern market center price. Later in the fall, when the Chicago price dropped to around $14, the valley growers frequently received $2 per hundred above the eastern quotation.

SHORTHORNS AT THE TOP

The highest record ever made at the Omaha market, $20 per cwt., was made by Shorthorn steers the first week in December. A carload of Shorthorn steers topped the Kansas-City market at $19 the same week, making the high record for 1919.

The Shorthorn steer carlots at the International, Chicago, sold for an average of $25.69 higher than any other breed. A group of three Shorthorn steers won the grand championship over all breeds at the International.

A Shorthorn steer calf was made the grand champion over all breeds at the Pacific International, Portland, Ore. It pays to grow Shorthorn beef.

DORMANT TREE SPRAYING.

Too much emphasis cannot be put on the importance of thoroughness in all spraying operations. Use enough material and do the work with sufficient care to get good results. It is a mistaken idea of economy to stint on spray materials and risk the loss of a large part of the crop at harvest time. There are certain necessary expenses each year in every successful orchard, and spraying, when intelligently done, is one of the most important. The entire surface of the tree should be covered at each application. Spraying is not a tax, but when properly applied is an investment sure to yield a profit and is furthermore insurance against loss or damage by insect pests and fungus diseases.

CORN YIELD DROPS.

The acreage of corn harvested in the State in 1919 shows an increase of 2000 over 1918, but the yield per acre was only thirty-three bushels, as compared with thirty-five in 1918. Therefore the total production was 104,000 bushels less. In the United States, there were 102,075,000 acres harvested, with an average yield of 28.6 bushels, giving a total production of 2,917,450,000 bushels.

REFORESTATION NOW A VITAL NECESSITY.

BY DR. GEORGE P. CLEMENTS,
Manager Agricultural Department, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

Our prosperity of today, as well as that of the future, is dependent upon the clothing of our hills and mountains. All of our horticulture, agriculture and the manufactries within our cities are totally dependent upon our mountain reservoirs and their gradual release of waters.

We have been squanderers of our own inheritance, as well as that of future generations, in not making adequate provision to prevent the destruction of our forests, and in the face of the knowledge of results inevitable. An old country, but a new land, formed but yesterday out of disintegrated stock, rich in mineral salts, but poor in humus, which melts under the influence of winter moisture and bakes to pavement hardness under the influence of summer winds and sun, a general condition naturally hostile to the production of vegetation, yet readily surrendering to the intelligence of man and his scientific usage of water—such is Southern California.

So precious are our mountain forests—so vital are they to our existence—they should be our first thought and guarded as tenderly as the most sacred of our possessions. The murderous ax has done great harm and is still doing harm; that bane of our democracy, the total disregard of sacred things, has been guilty of two-thirds of our forest destruction. Our mountains teem the year through with multitudes. The fool and the thoughtless scatter firebrands and destroy all possibility of our future's greatness.

Brush fires are caused through neglected camp fires, through scattered matches, the cigar and cigarette stub, the scrapings of a pipe, and more frequently by the burning wad from the gun of a careless hunter. That the camper and hunter should be under regulation seems certain. Campers should be registered and their camps designated, their fire privileges defined. Hunters also should be registered and their ammunition examined. They all should be checked in and checked out and heavily penalized if guilty of disobedience or evasion.

What is to be done to reclothe these burned and cut-over districts? The top soil has been totally burned away—destroyed—and is not receptive, is coated with ash and saturated with alkaline salts. Our first hope would seem in the planting of quickly-growing native brush seeds, trusting that some may germinate and grow. This can only be undertaken when the bulk of the winter rains are past. Real, scientific reforestation can, however, be immediately begun. This must be carried out under programme, and as quickly as it is possible to grow the nursery stock and plant it in the mountains and hills.

In order to do this, there must be funds. They are needed at this moment to plant the already accumulated brush seeds and nursery trees at present, awaiting planting. This fund must be very elastic, as well as sufficient for the daily, monthly and yearly needs to meet the ever-growing demands—and will we begrudge them? I think not, for this is one investment in which we—every one of us—have vital interests. National experimental reforestation nurseries should be established, where all kinds of trees favorable to our needs will be tried out, and those already proven, propagated in sufficient quantities to keep an army of men constantly employed.

These clothed hills are an answer to food control argument. The check dam should begin at the roots of the brush and trees—among the pine needles, lichens and mosses—the mat of shrubs and vine roots—in the rifts and furrows, and gradually work down into the gully, canyon and valley. Keep the hills clothed and our drains open throughout our valleys and plains and we will have no more flood and no more summer shrinkage of water.

While reforestation and flood control work should go hand in hand, reforestation is the fundamental underlying principle. Every dollar spent other than for channel cleaning and preparation for the surely oncoming flood of winter by the the Flood Control Board might just as well be thrown into the ocean, for that would inevitably be its final destination. While on the other hand, every dollar possible of attainment should be spent in planting trees and sowing brush seed.

It is to accomplish lasting results—not simply to spend the people's money, that this work should be undertaken. Before a cement retaining dam is placed, a foundation is first deemed necessary. Yet the Flood Control Board will put a pile of poles in a loose, rotten rock erosion soil, which wind and water blows and deposits in the canyon, upon rotten rock foundation and expect it to withstand a flood.

Most of the canyons throughout the burned district will be swept clean—filled and swept again—before spring. Get behind reforestation and quickly! Wake up to what confronts the Southland and rise to the occasion!

TO DOUBLE OUTPUT OF TRACTORS THIS YEAR.

That the farm tractor has measured up to the standard set for it by automotive engineers and is now recognized as an invaluable aid in modern farming is proved by the great demand for the machines for the year 1920.

Estimates made from the best information available indicates that the manufacturers of tractors in the United States have made plans to almost double the 1919 output, says the Farm Implement News. One of the large tillage machine concerns estimates that the 1920 tractor production at 319,500, while other estimates run from 300,000 to 315,000. It is certain that there will be over 100,000 more tractors made this year than during any other year. The production largely depends on whether the makers get enough labor and material to supply the demand.

Tractor sales of machines for spring delivery have been of enormous volume. It is reported that some of the manufacturers are oversold so far as production for spring use is concerned.

In connection with the estimate of 1920 production, it is interesting to note the estimates that have been made recently on tractor production during the past eleven years. These estimates represent the views of a number of factors, including trade papers, and are based on data that is considered trustworthy. The figures are not given as an accurate statement of production, but as an estimate that is not far from the facts. The figures for 1917 represent the official estimate made by J. F. Cook, while serving as farm implement administrator.

The yearly estimates are as follows: 1909, 2300; 1910, 4500; 1911, 7400; 1912, 11,400; 1913, 7400; 1914, 10,400; 1915, 21,900; 1916, 28,000; 1917, (U. S. figures,) 62,743; 1918, 135,000; 1919, 175,000.

CALIFORNIA HAS AN IMMENSE RICE CROP.

In eight years California has developed a new agricultural industry, rice growing, which this past season has resulted in a gross production estimated to be worth approximately $21,000,000. This showing is the result of research carried on by the Bureau of Plant Industry. Following experiments by the bureau covering three years, the first commercial rice crop was planted in 1912. The value of the 1919 rice crop in California will probably be several millions greater than that of wheat and peaches, both of which are commonly thought of as relatively large crops in this State.

QUARANTINE RULINGS LEAD TO ARGUMENTS.

The quarantine officers frequently have an unpleasant duty to perform in denying entry into the State of some carefully packed box containing southern oranges or grapefruit saturated with Christmas cheer and good wishes, to say nothing of a liberal supply of scale insects and fungus diseases, says a recent California Department of Agriculture report. Such gifts are sent in the best of faith by friends who are ignorant of the fact that they are being shipped in violation of one of California's quarantine orders.

Then, too, there is the eastern tourist who is enjoying a sojourn in California, and who, having become accustomed to Florida grapefruit for breakfast, will order a box of a favorite brand in an attempt to prove to friends its superiority over the California grown fruit. In due time the box arrives and is detained at the express depot by the quarantine inspector, while a written notice together with a copy of the quarantine order violated is mailed to the consignee, giving the option of sending the fruit out of the State or having it destroyed. This notice is usually considered a red flag, and the quarantine office soon becomes the arena where a fluent flow of argument is presented in an endeavor to show the quarantine officer why a particular box should be exempt from the requirements of quarantine Order No. 28. Meeting with no success through persuasion, sarcasm or wrath sometimes tears follow in rapid succession, and as a parting shot the whole Department of Agriculture is apt to be denounced in no uncertain terms.

AVERY FACTORY BRANCHES.

Owing to the increased demand for power farming and tillage implements in California, the Avery Company, of Peoria, Ill., has established branch offices at 237 South Los Angeles street, Los Angeles and at San Francisco. The former office, in charge of W. W. Rainey, is the distributing office for Southern California. The products of this company were previously distributed by the Avery Company of the Pacific Coast, a jobbing corporation which has recently relinquished its contract in order that the manufacturers might better serve the people by installing factory branches and carrying in stock a fuller line of machines and parts to insure prompt and efficient service. Men who have been trained in service under factory experts are being added to the force.

Prevent worms and other diseases in hogs by keeping the animals in a good healthy condition, and the surroundings sanitary.

Vaccinate against cholera. It may keep you from losing faith in the hog business.

HOW TUBERCULOSIS GETS INTO THE HERD.

Tuberculosis may be introduced into a healthy herd by any of the following means:

Addition of an animal that is affected with the disease. Animals should be purchased only from herds known to be free from tuberculosis or from herds under supervision for the eradication of the disease.

Feeding calves with milk or other dairy products from tuberculous cows. This frequently occurs where the owner purchases mixed skim milk from the creamery and feeds it to his calves without first making it safe by boiling or pasteurization.

Careless showing of cattle at fairs and exhibitions. Reports have indicated that numerous herds have become infected through mingling with diseased cattle at shows or by occupying infected premises.

Shipment of animals in cars which have recently carried diseased cattle and which have not been disinfected properly.

Use of community pastures in which tuberculous cattle are allowed to graze.

In most cases the outward appearance of the animal bears no relation to the degree of infection. The disease frequently develops so slowly that in some cases it may be months, or even longer, before any symptoms are shown; therefore to be on the safe side the owner should have his herd tested.

Salt should be available for the hogs at all times, or given once a week, preferably fed with charcoal mixture.

Converting Feed into Money

it's an open secret

Success in the dairying business hinges largely on two things: the character of the herd and the character of the feed—for the feed tells in the flow. This little handbook—which is yours for the asking—takes the feeding question and simmers it down to actual profit-figures that you can use every day.

How to measure the true food value of different stock feeds—how to cut down the cost of milk production—how to know which cows are really profit-producers and which are not—all this is explained in the new edition of our booklet, "Converting Feed Into Money." Full of "real meat" and profit-hints to every dairyman. Send for it now—it's free! Simply cut out the coupon and mail today!

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION BARS DEMONSTRATIONS.

No National tractor demonstration will be held by the National Implement and Vehicle Association this year, nor will that body sanction any regional demonstrations. The members decided to remain neutral on one-day dealers' demonstrations. The Kansas City indoor tractor show was sanctioned.

J. B. Bartholemew, president of the Avery Company, who is so enamored of California that he spends half his time here, asked to be allowed to "get back on the side lines" and declined to accept longer the honor of being chairman of the tractor and thresher division. E. J. Gittins, J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company, was elected chairman. E. G. Merwin, Russell & Co., was continued in the position of secretary-treasurer, and G. P. Alexander, Aultman & Taylor Machinery Company, was elected vice-chairman. The members of the new Executive Committee include: J. A. Everson, International Harvester Company, chairman; J. B. Bartholomew, Avery Company; E. J. Gittins, J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company; Finley P. Mount, Advance-Rumely Thresher Company; E. C. Merwin, Russell & Company; H. P. Goodling, A. B. Farquhar Company; George N. Peek, Moline Plow Company; C. S. Brantingham, Emerson-Brantingham Implement Company, and Dent Parrett, Parrett Tractor Company.

RESERVE POWER NEEDED IN TRACTOR OPERATION.

If the farmer desires to get the maximum number of years of service out of a tractor, he must have reserve power; he must not load the machine to the limit continually. There are times in plowing with the tractor where the resistance is doubled—when the plows run up against hard soil, a stump, boulders, etc. When the machine is overloaded for any length of time, there is excess wear on the parts, and great damage is liable to be done.

Find out the rated horse power of the tractor, its usual plowing speed, and the average soil resistance. At two miles per hour the average horse pulls 200 pounds, and exerts a little over one mechanical horse power. The average resistance to the passage of the plow through the soil is about five pounds per square inch of the cross section of the plow. If a fourteen-inch plow is used, plowing six inches deep, the cross section would be 6x14, or eighty-four square inches. At an average pressure of five pounds per square inch, the resistance is 420 pounds per plow. Of course, resistance varies in different soils. In sandy soil the resistance is two to three pound per square inch; in barley stubble four pounds; in grass sod, six pounds; in alfalfa sod, seven pounds; in clay soil, eight pounds; in heavy adobe, eighteen to twenty pounds.

The Manure Spreader Gives Even and Rapid Distribution.

PREPARING SWINE FOR MARKET KILLING.

In preparing hogs to be slaughtered a fast of twenty-four to thirty-six hours, plenty of water, careful handling, and rest before slaughter are all important in securing meat in the best condition for use, either fresh or for curing purposes. Food in the stomach decomposes very rapidly after slaughter, and where the dressing is slow the gases generated often affect the flavor of the meat. Water should be given freely up to the time of slaughter, as it keeps the temperature normal. It is highly important that the animal be not excited in any way sufficiently to raise the temperature of the body. If the animal becomes heated it is better to allow it to rest over night before killing than to risk spoiling the meat. It is also essential that the hog be carefully handled so as not to bruise its body.

MUCH SAVING POSSIBLE IN MANURE HANDLING.

An enormous amount of manure, probably the best fertiliser in the world, is wasted annually in the United States.

Figuring on the basis of commercial fertiliser values, each horse or mule produces each year $27 worth of manure; each head of cattle $20 worth; each hog $8 worth, and each sheep $5. Going back ten years and taking the figures of the 1910 census, this would figure out about $2,461,000,000. Estimates by the U. S. Department of Agriculture indicate that probably about a fourth of this is wasted.

The cheapest and best way to handle manure, where convenient, is to haul it to the field and spread it daily, or at least every two or three days. The economical and efficient way of doing this, of course, is by the use of a manure spreader. If plenty of bedding be used, practically all the valuable constituents of the manure are saved, since leaching after the manure is on arable land merely serves to put the fertilizing materials where they ought to be. In this way, too, loss through heating, or "fire-fanging," is avoided.

Many farmers, however, are not so situated as to make it profitable for them to handle manure in this way. For such farmers the concerte manure pit offers an ideal way of saving manure. Such a pit need not entail great expense. A pit three feet deep, twelve feet long, and six feet wide, with walls and floors five inches thick, will serve the needs of the average farm. In ground that does not cave in, only an inside form will be needed for such a pit, except where the concrete extends a few inches above the ground to prevent flooding by surface water. The floor should be reinforced with woven-wire fencing, put in after about two inches of cement has been laid, the section of fencing being cut long enough to bend up a few inches at either end into the side walls. When the reinforcing has been put in, the remaining three inches of the floor is laid and the forms for the side walls set up and used immediately. Use one part cement, two of sand and four of screened gravel. A pit of this kind is large enough to hold the accumulation of manure on the average farm until such a time as it can be hauled conveniently to the field and spread.

Another good way to save manure, especially in the case of hogs or of beef cattle, is to have a concrete-paved feed lot, preferably under a shed roof. Where the farmer cannot afford a paved floor, it has been found in the Middle West, a cheap open feeding shed may be made to serve the purpose very well, if abundant bedding is used to absorb the valuable liquid manure. In such a feeding lot or shed the manure is allowed to gather under the feet of the animals, each day's bedding being strewn over the well-tramped accumulation below. Some farmers using this system arrange their feed racks so that they can be raised from time to time, making it possible to feed till several feet of solidly packed manure has accumulated under the shed. It has been shown that manure suffers little from heating and leaching when handled in this way.

The feeding shed serves the purpose of giving the general farm, or the beef-cattle farm, something of the advantage in the matter of manure saving held by the intensive dairy farm. It has been shown that the manure saved on the American farm under present conditions is almost exactly proportional to the number of animals fed under cover on the farm, and that the manure of animals not stabled has very little effect on yields, except in cases where field crops are "hogged-off" or otherwise pastured down or where pasture is used in a rotation.

KEEP HOGS HEALTHY. IN CLEAN QUARTERS.

No system of feeding is likely to prove satisfactory unless the hogs are healthy. Many of the losses occurring in herds of swine can be avoided by preventive measures.

Inbreeding—that is, the mating of animals closely related, should be avoided in most cases. Probably more serious, however, is the continuous use year after year of immautre sows and boars. This practice is sure in time to produce small weak pigs of low vitality which readily succumb to the attacks of the various diseases. Long continued, the herd generally deteriorates very perceptibly in rapidity and economy of gains and in general excellence. The decline may be so graded as not to be observed by the owner, yet there is probably no other single factor so detrimental to the prosperity of the swine industry as this one.

Clean, dry sleeping quarters free from draughts are essential. When such are not provided, rheumatism, asthma and pneumonia are prevalent, and lice and worms find excellent harboring places.

A central hog house that can be kept clean, dry, free from dust and draughts is a convenient place for farrowing and for the storage of feed. If runways of alfala or grass can be provided, so much the better. It is often advisable to supply individual houses for use in conjunction withthe central hog house. These can be readily moved to adjacent pastures by a team of horses. During the summer months a shade of rough boards or limbs of trees covered over with straw or hay may be sufficient to protect the hogs from the sun. These places should be kept free from dust. Some breeders prefer a hog wallow to keep the hogs cool. If this is built of concrete or similar material and constructed with an outlet drain so that it can be kept clean, it may prove very useful, but a mudhole is generally worse than nothing. It soon becomes filthy and when the hogs get badly covered with mud, especially in the Imperial Valley, they are liable to develop a serious skin disease.

Breeding hogs should not be self-fed, unless the feed ration is made bulky enough to insure a limited consumption of grain.

PROPER MILKING ART IN ITSELF.

The average farmer would laugh uproariously if someone were to ask him if he knew how to milk a cow. He might take it the other way if anyone were to seriously question his [illegible] experts of the U. S. Department of Agriculture say there are a lot of things that a lot of farmers don't appear to know about milking cows.

The first essentials, one of them said recently, are clean healthy cows and a clean, healthy milker.

The next, perhaps, is a clean and sterilized pail with a narrow or partially covered top.

The cow should be curried before milking to remove loose hairs, dirt and dandruff. This should be done, if possible, an hour before milking to allow all dust to settle before milking is begun.

The next thing in order is a sort of sponge bath for the cow. It is a very simple matter, though, for all that is required is a pail of clean water and a cloth. Wash off and wipe the udder, the flanks, the thighs, and the switch.

That done, everything is ready for the actual milking—which process, by the way, should be approached with hands that are not only clean, but dry.

The milker sits down on a stool placed on the right-hand side of the cow. It is not very clear just why the right side is universally the milking side. Perhaps it is partially due to the fact that the great majority of persons are right handed. The milker on the right side of the cow, if she starts to kick or to move, is in a better position to yank the pail out of harm's way before she can upset it.

Good Milkers Pay.

They always get larger yields than the amateurs.

The milker then grasps a teat in the palm of each hand. He squeezes the teat by closing the fingers around it and at the same time pulling the teat slightly downward. Then the fingers are loosened around the teat and the hand raised slightly to allow the teat to assume its original form and position, while the other hand squeezes and pulls slightly downward on the other teat. Thus each hand alternately gives a downward squeeze, in rhythmic order.

It is wise to milk about two squirts out of each teat before allowing any milk to go into the pail. Bacteria appear to accumulate around the end of the teat, and to be got rid of largely in this way.

Then clasp the small-top milk pail between the knees, with the covered portion of the top nearest the milker. If held in this position the covered portion will prevent hairs and dirt from falling into the milk.

Milk quietly but rapidly. The milker makes use of the mother instinct in the cow. Harshness is against that instinct and the cow does not secrete as much milk as she would if she were milked and handled quietly.

It must be remembered that not all the milk is in the udder when the milking process is begun. The cow secretes milk more rapidly during the milking process; and the milking, to be successful, must be done in such a way as to promote that secretion. If it is done so as to give pain to the cow or to alarm or disquiet her, she will not give so much milk.

Keep milking as long as it is possible to get any milk. The last milk is the richest. The first milk drawn is always comparatively low in buter fat. It is the "strippings" or last milk given that contain the highest per cent. of butter fat.

Well, tha tis about all there is to the milking process. A great many things are related to it. The Department of Agriculture recommends that that milk should be weighed daily. There are several reasons for this. One is that the ration should be adjusted to the weight of milk. A safe rule, the department experts say, is one pound of grain to every three and one-half or four pounds of milk. Another, and perhaps more accurate, rule is to feed as many pounds of grain a day as the cow gives pounds of butter fat in a week; but this latter rule is not so conveniently applied in the case of the family cow, because of the necessity of making a Babcock test for butter fat.

The weight of milk produced, in proportion to the grain ration, is of particular importance during the first thirty days after the cow freshens. She is at that time most easily able to establish her working basis. She has just had her vacation. Her milk secreting glands are sensitive, her digestive apparatus active. A few days after she becomes fresh, increase her grain one-half or three-quarters of a pound a day, and see how much milk she gives the following day. Keep up the increase from day to day as long as she responds with enough increase in milk to pay for the increased grain. When the point is reached where the milk flow fails to increase with increased feeding, reduce the grain ration a pound or two, and keep along this line until the point is found at which the cow produces the greatest and most economical flow of milk. Then fix this as her regular grain ration as long as she produces that amount of milk.

FINE GUERNSEYS SOLD.

J. L. Hope of Florham Farms, Madison, N. J., has recently sold a half interest in the Guernsey bull, Ultra Select, who is an inbred son of Ne Plus Ultra, the latter being a full brother to Itchen Daisy's May King of Langwater, recently sold by W. H. Dupee of Santee, Cal., to W. H. Herd of Herdlea, Pa., for $20,000. C. D. Cleveland of Eatontown, Pa., has also sold a Guernsey calf within the last few days for $16,400. During the six months Itchen Daisy's May King of Langwater was at Edgemoor Farm at Santee he was bred to quite a number of the best cows there. Reports indicate that there is a boom in the East on high-class Guernsey cattle.

LOS ANGELES MILK AT NATIONAL SHOW.

When a bottle of cream shipped from Los Angeles to the National Dairy Show at Chicago was opened and tested eighteen days after it had left the cow, it was pronounced in perfect condition by those who examined it. Other samples of milk and cream entered in the national milk and cream contest and examined fifteen to eighteen days after production were also found to be sweet.

Because of the number of bacteria present, ordinary milk will not remain wholesome for such a long time, even if kept cold. The milk and cream which made such long-keeping records were produced under very sanitary conditions, and every precaution was taken to keep them clean and to keep the bacteria count low. Furthermore, the milk was cooled to a low temperature immediately after it was drawn, and held there. The success attained in producing milk of such long-keeping qualities and low-bacteria count is due in a large measure to the educational value of the local milk and cream contests which have been especially popular in cities of the Pacific Coast States.

The bottles of milk which were placed in boxes, and surrounded with crushed ice, were kept at a temperature from 32 to 34 deg. Fahrenheit at all times. The boxes were shipped in baggage cars to Chicago, and most of them were not reiced along the route. An inspection of the samples on arrival at Chicago showed that of the various methods of packing, the insulated box filled with crushed ice was the most effective. The bottles of milk in these boxes were entirely surrounded by the ice, which was packed in as tightly as possible. One or two samples which were packed in ice and sawdust arrived in a spoiled condition, due to the fact that a low enough temperature had not been maintained. The ice in the insulated boxes lasted well, and one box from Portland, Or., which was reiced at Minneapolis on Tuesday did not arrive in Chicago until the following Saturday, but was still in good condition.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the Poultry Producers of Southern California, Inc., will be held at the office of the Corporation at 1560 Industrial street, Los Angeles, January 20, at 10 a.m.

Angora Goats Thriving on Brush-covered Hill Lands.

BY P. J. COONEY.

Angora goat herd of A. W. Walton in hills north of Perris.

THE tourist whirling past on the comfortable cushions of a Pullman car, en route to Los Angeles, notes with regret the many rock-strewn hills that ever and anon shut off views of mountains, orange groves and cultivated fields. He is often heard to lament the fact that so much territory is apparently waste land, covered with sage-brush and greasewood. In the western portion of San Bernardino and Riverside counties, in particular, these ridges hump themselves between fertile irrigated valleys. They are too high to be irrigated and often too scanty of soil depth to repay cultivation even if they could be supplied with water. They were once considered as hopeless as they look. Yet an industry is being born on these forbidding hillsides that is already coaxing from them a significant return in money profits—the raising of Angora goats.

Of all the goat family the Angora, producer of the fleece known as the "Mohair" of commerce, is the hardiest, the most easily handled and can live on the least. In the cattle country of the West there runs a proverb that "A half dozen sheep will grow fat where a steer would die." 'Tis said, too, by those who have raised the Angora that it will live and thrive on range where sheep would die of slow starvation.

In the apparently hopelessly barren hills that circle the Perris Valley, and to a great extent in the low ranges that streak the western parts of Riverside and San Bernardino counties, is to be found excellent pasturage for the Angora. Here the number of goat ranchers is increasing steadily. The goat raisers look forward to the future with confidence, made optimistic by the good average price that their product has brought during the last few years. In this district is everything that makes an Angora's life happy, sunshine, the desert vegetation and what is of considerable importance, rocks in abundance.

A visit to a typical Angora goat ranch reveals some interesting facts. Extensive buildings there are none. They are not necessary in this climate, where there are no whirling snowstorms, against which the flock has to be defended. A small barn with a supply of alfalfa for use at kidding time, while the ewes are in detention, a corral of sufficient size for the flock, with a portion of it covered, and a water supply are sufficient.

HANDLED LIKE SHEEP.

The general treatment of the Angora does not differ greatly from that given to sheep. At sunrise they are watered, and under the care of a herder, start off to the range. They show far more individuality and self-reliance than sheep and do not require as much herding. Sheep need to be piloted to a range, as the ground over which they have been moving is worn out, but Angoras need no direction from the herder; as if by instinct, they will start off to the scene of their last day's grazing, and move quickly, following their leaders when the herbage becomes scanty, to better grazing further on. The only care of the herder is to see that the flock does not scatter. Yet, at that, they do not range as far away as might be expected.

For instance, at the ranch of A. W. Walton north of Perris, 500 Angoras find ample forage on hills that would, to judge by their appearance, not support a grasshopper, within a radius of two and a half miles from the ranch house. In very warm weather the herd is generally headed back to the water at noon. In fact, if the weather is warm enough, the leaders start off themselves in that direction. If they show no evidence of thirst and the day is cool, as it generally is about 1000 feet altitude in the winter months, they water only once a day, in the morning and the evening.

Angoras, like others of the goat tribe, breed but once a year, bringing forth their young in February. This of course is the busiest season of the year for the goat man, especially if the weather is cold or wet, when loss among the kids from pneumonia must be guarded against. Yet the losses are declared to be much less than among sheep, on account of the Angora's greater stamina. Single births are generally the rule, yet ordinarily, from 10 to 15 per cent. of the females drop two kids. In the aggregate, the number of twins is said to about make up the loss of kids during the kidding season. So universally true is this that goat men count on around 100 per cent. increase in their flocks each year and if the weather is not extremely unfavorable, the rate of increase may often be greater.

THE KIDDING SEASON.

Kidding season is a period of unremitting activity for the goat raiser. When the first kids appear, the herd is held back and allowed to move slowly, while it is followed by a wagon loaded with the "sections" as the light panels to construct the temporary pens are called. These sections are built of one by three pine strips and are twelve feet by three. The wagon follows the slow movements of the herd and as the kids are dropped, they and their mothers are placed in a pen made of the sections, which are fastened upright forming small enclosed rectangles. Each panel has baling wire at the corners to fasten it in place. Not more than four ewes and their young are generally placed in a single pen, but by adding panels, the pens can be made any size, as circumstance may necessitate. At the end of the day, the kidding pens are strung out, possibly a half mile along the level of the draw. The object of the construction of the pens and their separation from the flock is to prevent kids from being trampled on by the flock, and to enable the mother to make sure of her young which she apparently recognizes, not by sight, but by its individual odor. Unless the weather is very unfavorable, the nannies and their young are left thereabout twenty-four hours, and are then removed by wagon to the ranch, there they are placed in the corral and given alfalfa. In six weeks the nannies and kids are ready to join the rest of the flock which meanwhile has been grazing as usual on the hills.

Before the nannies and their kids are allowed to rejoin the flock, the surplus male kids are castrated, leaving about one active male to 75 or 100 nannies. Castration is attended by no more difficulty than in the case of hogs and the after treatment of the wounds is much the same, generally a little salt or turpentine being used.

A unique method is used to determine the kid's fitness to follow the flock. A small bridgeway a foot and a half high and about three feet wide is placed at the exit to the corral. When the ambitious youngster can successfully negotiate this it is evidence that he is sufficiently recovered from the castration operation and is strong and active enough to join the others. His days in detention are numbered, and with his mother he is allowed to join the flock in their daily rambles.

SHORN TWICE A YEAR.

The Angora is shorn twice a year, in April and September, and although opinions on the matter differ, the majority of goat men find that the fall clip is slightly larger. The average yield per shearing is about one and a half pounds of mohair to the goat, which has yielded during the last five years an average price of from 50 to 60 cents per pound. This year it is anticipated that the price will be in the neighborhood of 50 cents. The shearing is now generally done by machinery, driven by a one and a half power gasoline engine. On the Walton ranch, the same engine which pumps the water for the herd's noonday drink is used for running the "two-man" shearing machine. It has been found that the machines, which consist of automatic shears at the end of a pliable driving line (similar to the drill with which the dentists drill a hole in a tooth,) can shear so much closer as to practically pay for themselves. At the first shearing the average Angora puts up a stiff fight. Thereafter, however, no trouble is ordinarily experienced. A good shearer can strip the fleece from an animal in an amazingly short time. About four minutes per goat is the record time for a day's labor.

The mohair raisers of the country are strongly organized and the success of the organization is a great argument in favor of co-operative bargaining. Their organization is known as the National Mohair Growers' Association and has its headquarters at Laguna, Tex. It maintains, however, offices and warehouses in Boston, where practically all of the mohair is shipped and where the organization has its selling office. Thanks to this organization the cost of handling, cleaning and marketing and freighting the mohair is reduced to a minimum for the grower. Besides this, the association finances its members. To secure working capital, they do not have to wait till their product is sold; as soon as they have received the bills of lading from the railroad, any mohair raiser can go to a bank and receive from 30 to 40 per cent. per pound advance on all the mohair he has shipped to the association. The association stands back of him in this and assumes the responsibility when his mohair is sold, the balance being remitted to him.

WILL FIGHT COYOTES.

Angoras suffer but little from coyotes. Cases have been known where a band of coyotes have surrounded and killed an individual goat, but the cases where the Angora has retreated to the top of a pinnacle of rock and successfully defended himself are far more numerous.

As with sheep, lice have to be guarded against, and the goats are dipped twice a year, generally ten days after shearing. They are driven through a tank, twelve feet long and two feet deep, filled with a lice-killing solution.

The eating of loco weed is an occasional but not a frequent nuisance to the goatman in some parts of the Southwest. When an Angora has tasted loco weed he shows all the symptoms of a drunken man, staggers, runs wildly about and often wants to fight everything in sight. Strange to say, it seems to be habit forming with goats. The goat that once tastes it will often seek it out and eat it again. The only cure is to keep him in the corral for a month or two till he has forgotten about his debauch.

Another source of revenue from Angoras is the sale of the manure or droppings. As the goats are herded in the corral every night, the amount of fertilizer dropped by them during the course of a year is enormous. So highly valued is it by the fertilizer companies, that they gladly pay from 10 cents up per cubic foot for it in place in the corral, assuming the cost of excavating and removing it themselves. Many goat men count on a revenue of from 90 cents to $1.25 per goat annually from the dropping alone.

The uses of mohair are many. It is used alone and mixed with sheep's wool in the making of cloth and of late years has found an increased use in the manufacture of automobile tops and cushion covers and as a basis for artificial leather coverings.

OPERATING COSTS SMALL.

The cost of the operation of an Angora goat ranch is small. A supply of water is the first necessity and that need not be very extensive. It can generally be obtained by pumping if there are no flowing springs. As for food, the Angora eats almost anything, sage brush, greasewood, mesquite, wild alfalfa, lupines and other plants all going into its diet. Little labor, except at shearing and kidding season, is required. One man and a dog, say goat men, can handle 1000 goats.

E. C. Sills, who has about 500 Angoras, at Armentrout a short distance from Perris, came to this locality about ten years ago broken down in health and took up his home in the hills. While farming a small patch of ground he became interested in the possibilities of the goat business and eight years ago started with a small herd of about thirty-five. Today he has a herd of 500, which, with very little labor, he says, bring him in a net income of $1850 to $2250 per year. In addition to this, during the last six years he has sold over $2000 worth of goats either for breeding purposes, or kids for the table. He ships a carload of the droppings for fertilizer every sixty days, for which he receives 13 cents, per cubic foot, delivered at the car. At present he is paying Mexican labor $2.75 per hundred for excavation and taking it to the station, leaving him a net profit of 10¼ cents per cubic foot. Mr. Sills's estimate is that a herd of Angoras properly cared for should pay the owner $2 per day the year around for the fertilizer alone.

That the possibilities in the desert hills for goat raising are not being overlooked is shown by the arrival recently at Corona of a trainload of five cars, containing 1000 goats, which were taken to grazing grounds in the Temescal range. The shipment was in charge of two Italians, R. Ricco and J. Ingo, who brought their families and complete outfit with them in two emigrant cars, and at once moved to Damrun Canyon, where they will make their headquarters.

For the man whose natural inclination leads him to the great out doors, or whose health requires the healing influence of the arid, wind-swept hills, there is probably no other occupation today that offers inducements greater than the raising of Angoras.

Suitable land is by no means scarce and can be bought or leased at a very low figure. Many goat raisers are using government free land or land obtained by homesteaders as desert claims and there are miles of rock-strewn hills in Riverside and San Bernardino counties that are still open to such location.

But it will not long be so, in the opinion of many. The industry, though now in its infancy, is growing so steadily that in a few years, it is predicted, most of the available locations will be taken and every rocky ridge will be dotted with its herd of white Angoras.

The "king of the flock" on the Sills Angora ranch in Perris Valley

A VALUABLE HANDBOOK.

The handbook of the small farmer and home gardener is the seed catalogue, and those issued by the California seed houses are becoming more elaborate and more useful to the grower year by year. The 1920 catalogue of Aggeler & Musser, Los Angeles, which is just out, contains an elaborate collection of crop data and cultural information based on careful experiments, under various Southern California climatic and soil conditions, extending over a period of many years. A feature of the catalogue is the information regarding new forage grasses gleaned by H. L. Musser through experiments conducted at the company's forage plant station in Los Angeles. Mr. Musser's experiments with nearly forty different kinds of grasses, to learn their adaptability to Southern California conditions and their relative value, will be a great help in the campaign to extend the forage area in this region.

The Los Angeles County Farm Bureau's Busiest Year.

THE Los Angeles County Farm Bureau has just celebrated its second anniversary, having been organized January 17, 1918. From the date of organization it has been a successful, going concern. Month by month it has grown and developed until at the present time it is no doubt the strongest and most representative farmers' organization in the county.

DEPARTMENT WORK.

The officers and directors during the past year have engaged their attention in a wide variety of problems.

The cow-testing department was the first to be organized in the bureau and from the beginning has been quite successful. From 1200 animals signed up December 1, 1919, and one tester engaged, this department has grown to the point where three testers are now engaged to handle the work and some 4000 cows are signed up for test. The department has been most active in furthering the interest of dairymen of the county, working in particular to encourage the dairying business by educating its members as to ways and means for reducing waste and increasing efficiency. A campaign for the more general raising of the feeds used was among the projects carried on. A campaign for the raising of corn and sorghum for silage purposes has resulted in considerable stimulus to silo building. Testing animals for elimination of the boarders has of course been the main purpose of the organization.

The growth of the Women's Home Department during the past year has been most gratifying. Although a Home Demonstration agent has been in the county ever since the Farm Bureau was organized, Home Department organization was not begun until January, 1919. Since then thirteen Home Department centers have been organized and county-wide organization was completed at the recent annual meeting, November 5th, by the election of a county chairman and director-at-large to represent the department on the board of directors. The officers and center chairmen of the Home Department are as follows: County chairman, Mrs. L. B. Doan, Burbank; director-at-large, Mrs. J. O. Colwell, Los Angeles; center chairman, Mrs. L. B. Doan, Burbank; Mrs. J. E. Johnson, Del Sur; Mrs. J. D. Cleminson, El Monte; Mrs. Eva Petterson, Hynes; Mrs. Howard Reynolds, La Crescenta; Mrs. W. D. Sommerville, La Verne; Mrs. O. Lewis, Littlerock; Mrs. Eva Crippen, Long Beach; Mrs. A. H. Gregg, Mill Creek; Miss Antoinette Biller, Spadra; Mrs. Lela A. Barton, East Whittier; Mrs. A. Z. Wilson, Roosevelt, and Miss Emma L. Hawks, San Dimas.

THE VARIOUS PROJECTS.

The various projects actively being worked on by the organization include: Fire and flood protection under Messrs. Bissell, Craig, Clements, Killian, Landenberg; legislative, Neely, Rosecrans, Maulsby, Biller and Craig; cow-testing under Messrs Frye, Brown and Hitchcock; membership, under Messrs. Rosecrans, Maulsby, Bissell and Underhill and Mrs. Doan; San Fernando water rate, under Messrs. Craig, Kienholz and Landenberg; boys' clubs, under Messrs. Maulsby, Harrington, Parker and Twohy; Japanese problem, under Messrs. Biller, Rosecrans, Clements, Bissell and McNees; labor conditions, under Messrs. Killian, McNees, Graham, Goodall and McQueen, marketing, under Messrs. Doan, Culbertson, Graham, Clements and Haenggi.

Curtis, vice-director, La Verne.

Legislation affecting farmers has been considered by a special committee. Its duties are to keep Farm Bureau members and farmers in general posted as to proposed legislation, local, State or national, affecting their interests, to call to the attention of various legislative bodies the wishes and desires of the farmer, and to crystallize the feeling of farmers on legislative matters, reporting back to legislative bodies. This committee was responsible for the passing of an act through the State Legislature appropriating funds for the investigation of a new pest of walnuts in Southern California.

JAPANESE QUESTION STUDIED.

The Japanese situation with reference to California agriculture is a serious one. Native-born farmers are being crowded off the land. The number of Japanese and the acreage of land being farmed by them is on the rapid increase. The Farm Bureau is engaged in a serious study of the problem. Hearings are being held, data secured and plans formulated for a safe, sane and conservative programme calculated to solve the problem.

Following last year's collapse in the bean market, work was undertaken by the bureau looking toward placing the industry on a sound basis. Aid was furnished the bean growers and bean growers' associations in pooling their interests. Competition from foreign beans raised with cheap labor threatens to put the bean industry of America out of business. Facts and figures on costs of production representing 22,000 acres were gathered and sent to representatives and Congressmen and to other interested parties. Agitation for a tariff on imported beans was started, the final result being that Congressman Osborne introduced a bill providing a tariff of 4 cents per pound on all imported beans. The bill has not yet come up for action.

The recent disastrous forest fire which denuded some 135,000 acres of watershed in the two principal watersheds of the county has brought the questions of flood control reforestation and fire protection into prominence again and the Farm Bureau in hard at work on a broad comprehensive and constructive programme for solving these problems.

MILK CHARGES INVESTIGATED.

Charges that milk producers are profiteering at the expense of the babies of Los Angeles having recently been raised, the Farm Bureau has undertaken to get the facts. The problem, says the bureau, seems to be largely one of cutting distribution costs by elimination of duplication of effort and of reducing production costs by the dairymen by weeding out the boarders and raising their own feed.

The Farm Bureau has always been ready to aid meritorious co-operative associations doing business in the county. Information regarding the total of fifty or sixty associations doing business in the county is on file at headquarters. In addition, the Farm bureau during the past year has been instrumental in organizing or has aided in the organization of two potato marketing associations, one lima bean growers' marketing association, a pure-bred Duroc-Jersey breeders' association and a seed potato growers' association.

During the past year the farm advisers, working in co-operation with and through the Farm Bureau, have undertaken many phases of work with the special agricultural interests of the county, some of the work covered by farm adviser projects, but much of it entirely outside of project work.

Work with citrus growers had included pruning demonstrations, scalybark and gummosis treatment demonstrations, soil moisture distribution demonstrations, the organization of three co-operative orcharding companies, an investigation of the manure situation and the application of manure in furrows as fertilizer in citrus orchards, a campaign for the more extended use of covercrops, both summer and winter, in the citrus orchards, the conduction of a fumigating school, further investigation of the June drop of navel oranges, a campaign for the increased use of selected buds in propagation work and the top-working of aberrant farms, an investigation of the possibilities of combining poultry and citrus as a means of diversifying orcharding and obtaining manure, and aid to the horticultural commissioner in getting a better understanding with growers regarding frost inspection work.

Work with deciduous fruit growers has included pruning demonstrations, including both winter and summer treatment, with all varieties of deciduous, a campaign to extend the practice of winter irrigation as a preventative of many of the more or less obscure troubles so prevalent now, an investigation of gummosis in plums which was found to be a seasonal effect of drought and alkali accumulation, a campaign for more extended winter spraying, particularly for bud blight and leaf curl of the peach and shot hole on the apricot, a campaign for greater efforts at pear blight control and a study of home fruit raising problems with the preparation of a manual on the same.

Efforts in behalf of the walnut men have consisted of two special conventions or schools for walnut growers, demonstrations on dusting, spraying and pruning, a campaign for more winter irrigation to prevent die-back and drought injury and a general campaign to improve the care given walnut orchards.

Work with live-stock interests has included conducting twenty-one live-stock judging demonstrations, assisting in livestock sales and meetings at a large number of fairs and shows, judging live-stock at eight different fairs and shows, the conducting of a number of special meetings on feeding and other live-stock problems, hog cholera vaccination work on numerous occasions and aid in combatting an epidemic of septicaemia.

Work with poultrymen has consisted of the location and occasional visiting of ten poultry demonstration farms in the county, the arranging for the annual poultry institute, arranging for a series of culling demonstrations by university and Department of Agriculture specialists and aiding in diagnosing outbreaks of ptomaine poisoning in poultry.

Work with field crop men has largely been confined to two important crops, potatoes and beans.

Potato growers have been aided through a campaign for special curing treatment for seed for the fall crop, through the location of dependable seed supplies, a special campaign to increase the use of a winter growing green manure crop for turning under a fertilizer, seed treatment for diseases, and the staging of the annual potato growers' observation trip out of which developed the California seed potato growers, the only organization of potato seedsmen in State.

Work with bean growers has consisted of a campaign for better selection of seed, particularly with the Bush Henderson variety, the location of ten inoculation plots, aid in a campaign of advertising for the "baby lima," the furnishing of cooking recipes by the demonstration agent to the State market director, the staging of Baby Lima Bean Day at Van Nuys, the center of lima bean production, a campaign to increase the use of irrigation water in bean growing, the organization of a Lima Bean Growers' Association, investigation of the baby lima bean pod borer, the organization of a co-operative bean bag pool and special aid to the tepary bean growers in trying to market their crop through publicity as to suitable methods of cooking, the sending of a committee of tepary bean growers to San Francisco to see the food administrator and to Washington to interview the United States Grain Corporation, acquainting the State purchasing agent with the value of tepary beans and putting him in touch with a supply of them.

THE BUREAU STAFF.

The Los Angeles County Farm Bureau is one of the thirty California Farm Bureau organizations which recently joined together to form the California Farm Bureau Federation, which voted unanimously to join in the American Farm Bureau Federation recently organised at Chicago.

The present staff of farm advisers includes five men and the home demonstration agent. To care for the work of the department three office assistants are employed which, together with the three testers supervised by the farm adviser, makes a total force of twelve persons.

The specialities of the members of the staff are as follows: Farm Adviser Hodgson, citrus and deciduous fruits, soils and fertilisers, plant diseases and land judging. Assistant Farm Adviser Scribner, dairying and general live-stock; Assistant Farm Adviser Gordon, swine, general live-stock, poultry and field crops; Assistant Farm Adviser Waterhouse, boys' club work and general farm problems; Assistant Farm Adviser Blanchard, citrus and deciduous fruits; home demonstration agent, Mrs. Jessica C. Hazzard, home economics, domestic science.

Your skin needs Different kinds of Care at Different Time

Before you protect your plexion fro
blighting col
way

More and more women are discovering how they can remain powdered and free from shine for five to six hours. Before powdering they apply a bit of Pond's Vanishing Cream

DO respect the individuality of your own skin! So many people forget that their skins have as much character, as much temperament, as they have themselves.

Your skin is not a piece of fabric that can always be cared for in the same way. It is a living thing which has different needs at different times.

IN cold weather, for example, your complexion is quite unlike its usual self. The exquisite satin texture which it has in summer, in winter is often lost. It is the irritating action of the cold, combined with the withering effect of the dry furnace heat that robs it of its oil and makes it harsh and dry.

In winter you must give your skin a special kind of care to counteract these influences.

Before you go out, rub a tiny bit of Pond's Vanishing Cream into your skin. It disappears instantly, leaving your face soft and smooth. There is no oil in Pond's Vanishing Cream, so it never reappears in a wretched greasy shine—and it gives your skin the protection it needs from chapping and roughening.

THEN, about powdering—just because when the weather is warm and your skin is moist you can get the powder to go on smoothly and stick on for a while, do not expect it to stay on in winter without a powder base. Your skin offers a very different surface to the powder then.

Before you powder, rub a tiny bit of Pond's Vanishing Cream into your face. Instantly it will disappear, leaving the skin softened. Now see how smoothly the powder goes on, how natural it looks. It will stay on two or three times as long as ever before. Because it is without oil, Pond's Vanishing Cream can never reappear in a shine.

HAVE you ever stared in the glass and wondered miserably what gave your skin that dull, lifeless look?

Very, very often a dull skin is only one that is improperly cleansed.

At night before retiring is the occasion when your skin should have a special kind of cleansing. Only with a good oil cream can the dust that has been working into the pores all day be removed. Before retiring give your face a thorough cleansing with Pond's Cold Cream. The first time you do this you will be mortified and delighted at the amount of dust that comes out. Pond's Cold Cream has just the amount of oil to make it best adapted to cleansing the skin and clearing up clogged pores.

WATCH out for the times when your face looks lined and your skin lacking in vitality. These are the times you need massage. Pon's Cold Cream is made exactly the consistency to work well into the pores and give a perfect massage.

Your skin needs two creams, one with, and one without an oil base.

For a powder base, for preventing chapping or for a quick freshening up, you cannot use a cream which contains oil. You need Pond's Vanishing Cream for use in the day or evening. It contains no oil and never reappears in a wretched, greasy shine.

For cleansing, and for massage, your skin needs Pond's Cold Cream. It has just enough oil to enable it to get well into the pores and to remove the dust and dirt lodged deep in them, and just enough body to make it perfect for massage.

Neither of these creams fosters the growth of hair or down.

Get a jar or tube of each cream today, at any drug or department store. With these two creams you can give your skin the different kinds of care it needs at different times. It will be a revelation to you to see how lovely your skin can be.

Massage the places where lines threaten to come. Work upwards outwards with Pond's Cold Cream.
